Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, every year on Memorial Day, we recognize those who fought for our nation and gave their lives in the name of democracy and freedom. It is a time for us to remember the patriotism they showed as they went into battle, the courage with which they fought, and the ultimate sacrifice they made for our country.

My home State of Michigan has lost many good men and women to war. We lost 18,906 people in World War I, World War II, the Korean war, and the Gulf war. We lost over 2,600 men and women in Vietnam—more people per capita than any other State in the nation. We understand the honor in answering a nation's call to serve, and we know what it means to lose parents, brothers, sisters, and children to battle. As a Vietnam-era veteran, and the son of a WWII veteran, I know in my heart the value of this service.

Our lost soldiers have earned parades, memorial services, and events in their honor. But they have also earned a commitment from their nation that we will never forget their service and will treat all who fight for our country with dignity and respect. We should remember our lost soldiers not just in words, but deeds. We should honor their sacrifices by providing good health care, benefits, and compensation to our veterans who fought alongside them and the current members of our Armed Forces. We should honor them by fulfilling all the promises that we made to them and their families when they answered the call of duty.

As we observe Memorial Day, let us not be content with honoring our soldiers just this one day each year. Let us remember in our hearts the ultimate gift these men and women gave to us. And let us keep in our prayers those men and women who are serving our nation overseas today. In their courage and strength, they set an example for all of us and remind us of what it means to be an American.

REPEALING SUNSET OF ECONOMIC GROWTH AND TAX RELIEF RECONCILIATION ACT OF 2001 WITH RESPECT TO EXPANSION OF CERTAIN ADOPTION PROGRAMS

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CAMP, for introducing this legislation.

This important legislation expresses the strong sense of Congress that Adoption Credit and Adoption Assistance Programs should not expire. Many parents who seek to provide a permanent home to a child face the high cost of adoption, thereby discouraging families from engaging in the adoption process.

Families spend between $8,000 and $30,000 to adopt a child. Necessary expenses directly related to the legal adoption of a child can include court costs, attorney fees, traveling expenses and some unpredictable costs. Sec. 202 of H.R. 1836 Expansion of Adoption Credit and Adoption Assistance Programs benefits children who need the stability of a permanent home by easing the financial burden placed on willing families.

We must do all we can to encourage adoption at this critical time when our nation faces a shortage of families willing to provide permanent homes for children. As of March 31, 2000, there were 588,000 children in foster care. Of those children in foster care, more than 117,000 were waiting to be adopted. Today, that number continues to rise.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation prioritizes easing the financial burden of the adoption process for families that are prepared to provide homes for children in need of them, I ask my colleagues to support this important bill.

COLONEL JAMES W. DELONY'S RETIREMENT

HON. J. RANDY FORBES

OF VIRGINIA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a true American patriot who has committed his entire career to the mission of defending America. Colonel James W. DeLony, United States Army Corps of Engineers, is retiring from duty bringing to a close his admirable 29-year military career.

Colonel DeLony, a 1973 graduate of Texas A&M, spent much of his career in the elite Airborne forces including command of the 101st Airborne Division's Engineer Battalion and as the Brigade Operations Officer of the 20th Airborne Engineer Brigade during the Gulf War. For his service, Colonel DeLony has been awarded a number of decorations including the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal (Five Awards), Army Commendation Medal (Two Awards), National Defense Service Medal (Two Awards), Saudi Arabia Liberation Medal and the Kuwait Liberation Medal. He has also earned the Senior Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge, and the coveted Ranger Tab.

In his most recent assignment, Colonel DeLony served as the Commander of the Wilmington District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. In this position, Colonel DeLony battled different foes, from mosquitoes in the Cape Fear River to Hurricane Debby as it threatened the Southeast coast. He has distinguished himself in this assignment, providing able leadership as his command carried out its essential mission of enhancing the military and economic capabilities of South-Central Virginia and North Carolina.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as the Representative of the citizens of Virginia's 4th District to congratulate Colonel DeLony on his magnificent career and to thank him for his long service to America. Colonel, we wish you and your wife Jennifer every happiness as you begin this new assignment and thank you both for your dedication to service and duty.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO HILDA VAUGHAN

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Hilda Vaughan, an exceptional individual who has selflessly devoted her time and energy to the betterment of this nation. I applaud her outstanding character, and her desire to support and educate her community. Hilda demonstrates impressive qualities worthy of such praise, and today we honor her retirement as a salute to a job well done.

Hilda was born in Lynchburg, Virginia, and spent her adolescent years thirsting for knowledge. After graduating from Rustburg High School in Rustburg Virginia, she obtained a Bachelor of Arts degree from Lynchburg College, and married her beloved husband, Ted Vaughan. Hilda moved to Silt, Colorado, and served her community well, by holding a number of clerical, secretarial, and accounting positions. Additionally, Hilda achieved her EMT–B certification and assisted the Grand Valley Fire Protection District. Hilda's attention to detail, together with her unwavering determination, led her to become and perform as an outstanding substitute teacher and librarian for 23 years. As a student teacher in Lynchburg, she educated herself to become a mentor as well as a teacher. Her first substitute teaching position was in the RE–2 School District, in Rifle, Colorado. Through her experiences in different geographic areas and districts, Hilda expanded her vast knowledge and wisdom, and became an excellent asset to every school district she served. Today we admire a woman who selflessly donated her time and efforts to upholding the structure of her community.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride I honor such an outstanding individual before this body of Congress and this nation. Hilda contributed so much, and she was so thoughtful, words will never express our appreciation to her. Hilda, thank you for your hard work in our country, and I anticipate great future achievements from you.

OF HAWAII

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, my flight from Los Angeles was delayed in departing and I unavoidably missed two rollcall votes. Had I been present, I would have voted as follows:

On rollcall No. 207, to make permanent the tax exemption for payments to Holocaust survivors, "Yea".

EXPLAINING SEPTEMBER 11TH TO FUTURE 4TH GRADERS

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I commend the following letter to you and all of our colleagues. Nicole Bansen read this letter at the Lindenhurst Memorial Day Ceremony on May 27, 2002. An elementary school student from Long Island, Nicole directed the letter to future 4th graders so that they might better understand September 11 based on her own experience. Like Nicole, I believe that we must help preserve the memory of that tragic day by sharing our stories with future generations.

DEAR FUTURE FOURTH GRADER: September 11, 2001 was a tragic day. I'm writing this letter to tell you what really happened. I was in school when it happened. That was the day that jet planes hit the Twin Towers, and soon both collapsed. Tower One was hit first. Within the next hour, Tower Two was also hit. Time seemed to freeze. Everyone just stopped what they were doing to see what happened in disbelief. It was like a nightmare coming true!

When I found out what had happened, my heart felt like it was shattered, just like the Twin Towers. After school, my brother and Mom told me to watch the news. I turned on the television and saw both planes crashing into the Twin Towers. A friend of our family's worked on the 72nd floor of Tower One. I was afraid that he might be killed, like so many others. He made it out of the building in minutes before it collapsed!

I was affected by this tragedy in a sad way because I will not see the Twin Towers anymore, and so many innocent people died. In the future, people should never forget this day, and always remember all the people who died. I believe parents should tell their children the truth about what happened when they are old enough to understand, so they aren't frightened. Your friends and you will learn about this day in your Social Studies class in school, if your parents didn't already tell you about it.

I hope this terrorist act never happens again. Hopefully you will never know the "evil" word, terrorism. But, if something like this does happen again, I am sure that everyone will be very sad. I am so glad to be an American, because of our freedom and people staying united through difficult times.

Sincerely,

NICOLE BANSEN.

FARM SECURITY ACT

HON. ERNEST J. ISTOOK, JR.

OF OKLAHOMA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request that the attached article appearing in The Weekly Standard on May 27, 2002 regarding the recently passed and signed Farm Security Act conference report be included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From the Weekly Standard, May 27, 2002]

THE PIGS RETURN TO THE TROUGH

FARM SUBSIDIES ARE BACK, BIGGER THAN EVER

(By Fred Barnes)

The White House veto of the farm bill was bold and defiant, reflecting the strength and confidence of the president. The bill not only costs too much and imposes too many government controls, he said, but it's also filled with "so much that would be detrimental to farmers," their future would be put in jeopardy. "It would do harm to every agricultural region of the country," the president said, causing large surpluses. "Thus it fails to meet the test of being good for farmers and fair to all our people." Too bad this veto message didn't come from President Bush last week when he instead signed the bloated new farm bill. No, those words were President Eisenhower's as he vetoed the Agricultural Act of 1956.

At the last moment, Bush considered a veto. His aides checked with congressional Republicans to find out if the bill's price tag might be as much as $20 billion more than advertised. It's costly, but not that costly, the White House was told. And even if it were, it was too late for a veto, the president having signaled repeatedly that he'd sign the measure. So, with misgivings, Bush went along. Three times, he called the bill "generous," and he conceded "it's not a perfect bill." His weak explanation for signing it was: "There's no such thing as a perfect bill."

There's a lot more wrong with the bill Bush signed than a few imperfections. First, there's the money. Depending on whose projections you use, it will raise farm spending by $73 billion to $82 billion over 10 years. The bill's total cost is pegged at $457.8 billion, including $251.9 billion for food stamps. What's worse is the attitude of Congress and the White House toward the increased spending that the bill reveals. A war is on and there's again a huge deficit, yet Washington is back to its old ways, gorging on spending. The era in which big government was over is over.

The bill not only increases spending for most existing crop subsidy programs, it brings back old ones that had been killed and even creates new ones. Remember the mohair subsidy, which became famous because one of its recipients was newsman Sam Donaldson of ABC? It was eliminated in the Freedom to Farm Act of 1996, which was supposed to wean farmers off subsidies altogether, but didn't. Well, the mohair subsidy is back, along with the previously killed wool subsidy, thanks to the chairman (Larry Combest) and ranking Democratic member (Charles Stenholm) of the House Agricultural Committee, both from Texas. And thanks to the efforts of Democratic senator Kent Conrad of North Dakota, the honey subsidy has also risen from the dead.

Is it crucial to America for these products to be federally subsidized? Of course not. Yet what's alarming is how easily these subsidies were revived. The standard wasn't whether they are necessary. Obviously they aren't. It was whether the subsidies could be slipped into the farm bill, one way or another, while everyone is distracted by the war on terrorism. This is the old way of doing business in Washington: Feather your own nest—that is, your district or state—with as much of the taxpayers' money as you can get your hands on. This practice, dormant for a spell, is now back in full flower.

Republicans are almost as guilty as Democrats. For instance, they used the farm bill to present a gift to Ben Gilman, former chairman of the House International Relations Committee, who's retiring. Onion growers in his upstate New York district have been clamoring for federal aid for years, and so has Gilman. The farm bill provides a subsidy. Gilman was duly appreciative. "This measure enables us to finally deliver the needed $10 million in federal assistance to our Orange County onion farmers, who have suffered year after year," he said. Gilman is a capable congressman and a nice man. But should the farm bill be a vehicle for gifts?

The onion program is not the only new one. Conrad was the key player in bringing about a subsidy for "pulse" crops—you know, chickpeas, lentils, and dry peas. A subsidy for those is designed to encourage farmers to rotate their crops. Crop rotation is a good agricultural practice. But hasn't it been done for eons without a subsidy from Washington? Must farmers really be prodded at taxpayers' expense?

To no one's shock, the farm bill is blatantly political. As Richard E. Cohen and Corine Hegland noted in the National Journal, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle made sure Democratic senators up for reelection this year were helped. Max Cleland of Georgia got a bigger-than-ever peanut subsidy. Tim Johnson of South Dakota wanted something called "country-of-origin" labeling on products—and got it. Tom Harkin, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, got a big, fat farm bill to brag about back in Iowa.

What about President Bush? He could have kept the farm bill from becoming egregiously larded. Citing new economic circumstances, he could have called for a little belt-tightening. It was back in spring 2001 when Congress authorized the $73 billion increase in farm spending. At the time, the budget surplus was $5 trillion and no annual deficits were in sight. The economic slump changed things. By late 2001, the surplus had shrunk dramatically and deficits were foreseen. True, the White House complained about House and Senate farm bills as they were being drafted, saying they cost too much and didn't meet the White House's free-market standards. But Bush could have insisted Congress trim the $73 billion hike and not add programs.

Against a good bit of evidence, Bush and his aides assert the Freedom to Farm bill with its market-oriented approach has not been reversed by the new farm bill. At last week's signing ceremony, Bush said supplemental farm bills won't have to be enacted every year, as was the case after 1996. The new bill, he said, "is generous enough to eliminate the need for supplemental support later this year and in the future." We'll see. The question is whether farmers and their allies in Washington have merely been whetted. The answer, more likely than not, is whetted.

HOLOCAUST RESTITUTION TAX FAIRNESS ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Holocaust Restitution Tax Fairness Act of 2002 to repeal the sunset of the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001. This bill which allows the continued exemption of Holocaust related payments from federal income tax is an important and symbolic gesture on behalf of eligible individuals who were persecuted on the basis of religion, physical and mental disability, sexual orientation by Nazi Germany.

A reparation fund established by Germany makes approximately 60,000 payments to individuals living in the United States. Payments also come from countries and industries that benefited from slave labor or property confiscation during the Nazi era.

Payments to Holocaust survivors should not be subject to U.S. income tax. The Exclusion From Federal Income Tax For Restitution Received by Victims of the Nazi Regime was enacted as a thoughtful way to bring closure to a painful period in history.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation on behalf of victims of the Nazi regime.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION ANTITERRORISM ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. MENENDEZ. Madam Speaker, I come today to address the critical issue of American seaport security. I am acutely aware of the dangerous possibilities for terrorist acts against our seaports since I represent the third largest and the busiest seaport on the East Coast of the United States—the Port of New York/New Jersey, which creates over 229,000 jobs and generates more than $25 billion in commerce.

As we are all sadly aware, a terrorist's intent is not only to kill innocent people and destroy valuable property, but also to destroy our livelihoods and our way of life. Any terrorist action against our strategic seaports would have disastrous effects nationally and internationally. Any attempt on our part to grapple with the complex issues and details of developing and implementing a maritime security system must take into consideration the fact that we will need international cooperation and equal security capabilities.

We need to ensure the safety of cargo originating overseas, which then must pass through the global chain of custody, before it reaches our domestic ports. To fully understand the scope of dealing with maritime security, simply imagine that every single container bound for entry into the United States or simply passing through the United States is a potential weapon of mass destruction. Every ship could be a delivery system of doom and every port a potential target. Now realize that the equivalent of six million containers entered the United States last year aboard 7,500 commercial vessels making 51,000 port calls.

H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Anti-Terrorism Act of 2002, as amended, is an important step in ensuring the safety of cargo originating overseas. Together with the manager's amendment adding the Coast Guard reauthorization bill and the Custom's reauthorization act passed by the House shortly before the Memorial Day Work Period, the Congress is finally taking a comprehensive approach to port security.

Perhaps most critical to a timely global implementation of a port security system is the fact that H.R. 3983 incorporates the need to work effectively with foreign governments in order to ensure national security. This bill calls for the Department of Transportation to identify foreign ports that pose a security risk to the United States. If the Department finds a foreign port's security measures to be inadequate, it will make recommendations to improve these security measures. But if the foreign port fails to take corrective actions within 90 days, the Department can prescribe additional security conditions for ships and cargo entering the United States from these ports.

The bill also requires development of a cargo identification, tracking, and screening system, as well as performance standards to enhance the physical security of shipping containers. Also important is H.R. 3983's inclusion of a deadline (June 30, 2003) for the deployment of this cargo security system. We all know that such a time schedule is crucial to the protection of our people, seaports and national and international commerce. There is no time to waste on this endeavor. We must start and complete this strategy against terrorism greatly reduce the degree of vulnerability of our ports.

Finally, it codifies an emergency Coast Guard rule put in place immediately after the attacks of September 11th. Under this rule, shipping companies must electronically transmit passenger and crew manifests to the Department of Transportation prior to the vessel entering the United States.

Unfortunately, H.R. 3983 is vague or does not address many issues important to port security and I hope that my colleagues will address these issues in conference. For example, the bill creates a single, national transportation security card to be issued to port workers, merchant mariners, and truck drivers who work in "secure" areas based on the successful completion of a background check. Background checks and a single security card are something we have been doing at the Port of New York-New Jersey for many years. However, it remains to be seen how this single, national transportation security card is going to work in an actual seaport setting and I urge my colleagues to heed the concerns raised by those who actually run and work at our nation's seaports. These concerns include having a set of clear, defined standards; the ability to appeal based on merit, not just technicalities; and the fluidity of port traffic among many levels of security.

Another concern is the inadequate funding to assist ports in addressing the threat of terrorism. H.R. 3983 authorizes $225 million in grants over the next three years to assist U.S. ports in implementing the Coast Guard-approved maritime antiterrorism plans. Congress appropriated $93 million in the Defense Supplemental Bill to initiate this program. Unfortunately, the need greatly exceeds the amount provided in this bill.

The question becomes "How do we develop and implement a worldwide maritime security system which ensures the maximum security while causing minimal disruption to domestic and international commerce?" If we are serious about ensuring the safety of our seaports, then we must also ensure that sufficient funding is available for the development and implementation of the necessary technology, as well as for the training and hiring of additional personnel, if needed.

Among the important provisions of the Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Act of 2002 is the specific placement of the primary responsibility for the development of standards and programs under the newly created Transportation Security Administration headed by the Undersecretary for Transportation Security.

Ladies and gentlemen, we know now that the security of our homeland is a matter that concerns everyone in the country. We have been entrusted with the grave responsibility of developing timely and cost effective solutions to the complex issue of national security.

There are many questions still to be answered and many difficult decisions from our part still to be made. However, there are certain irrefutable facts that must guide us in making those decisions:

Our seaport security systems are currently neither comprehensive enough nor strong enough to deter a terrorist act.

Developing and implementing an effective seaport security system will require the cooperation and coordination with local, state and Federal government, port authorities, terminal operators, shippers and ocean carriers, and everyone involved in maritime transportation activities including labor.

In order to protect our national seaports, we must ensure that all ships and cargo bound for an American port have been inspected and cleared for entry. Thus, we must enlist the cooperation of foreign governments and make sure that these governments also have comparable security capabilities.

The development and implementation of a global maritime security system will require a substantial financial commitment, regardless of what cost-cutting measures may be taken.

The time for developing such a security system is now. Any legislative bill that passes the House must have a timetable or deadline for deployment.

We have an onerous responsibility upon our shoulders and we will have to make some very difficult decisions in the near future regarding the overall security of our beloved homeland. However, we should not despair. For over seven months we have seen how united our country has been in our determination to confront terrorism and our refusal to allow a terrorist attack to change our American way of life. We have demonstrated our courage, patriotism, strength of spirit and dogged determination in the face of the most catastrophic attack on our Homeland.

We will need these same traits as we work together to protect our people and our country.

STATEMENT ON PIPELINE SAFETY, H.R. 3609 TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE COMMITTEE MARKUP

HON. EARL BLUMENAUER

OF OREGON

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, the health and safety of our citizens is a central part of a livable community. We in Congress have a special responsibility to ensure that the federal government is doing all it can to make our communities safe. Sadly, in the area of pipeline safety we have fallen short. Between 1986–1999, 23 fatalities, 113 injuries, and $68 million in property damage resulted from 411 pipeline accidents. In the Pacific Northwest, two ten-year-old boys were killed in a 1999 pipeline explosion in Bellingham, Washington.

The bill before us today is a much-needed attempt to improve the federal government's role in pipeline safety, guarantee compliance from pipeline operators, and promote a more environmentally sound operation of natural gas and hazardous liquid pipeline systems. Four areas in particular I would like to see improved are integrity management, environmental review, whistleblower protection and the public's right to know.

Of these priorities, one that is of great importance to the families who live in communities with pipelines is the right to know the locations of these pipelines. Citizens have the right to know if a pipeline crosses near a school, hospital or important community landmark. These are not state secrets and the community's access to this information does not impair our nation's security. Many pipeline maps are already in the public realm and are posted on various public interest group web sites. Increasing public access to this information can only make our communities safer as the public will be more knowledgeable of where spills or leaks could occur.

While I support efforts to improve pipeline safety, I am concerned with any approach that would limit community awareness of the potential hazards of pipeline facilities. The public and the pipeline industry recognize the need to increase safety through appropriate federal supervision and protection. We must not fall short on our federal responsibility.

2002 SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT FOR FURTHER RECOVERY FROM AND RESPONSE TO TERRORIST ATTACKS ON THE UNITED STATES

SPEECH OF

HON. STEPHEN F. LYNCH

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Thursday, May 23, 2002

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4775) making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes:

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, throughout the history of this great nation, all of our political parties—whether they were Federalist or Anti-federalist, Democrat or Republican—have worked from a shared belief that each generation of Americans has a basic and continuing obligation to provide a better future for the next generation. Simply put, this is the promise of America. It reflects both the strength of our democratic system as well as its fragility. It is fragile in the sense that this promise to the next generation is only as good and as reliable as our willingness to honor that promise during times of great challenge. After all, it is easy to make promises when there is no cost to their fulfillment.

I find it troubling that the Republican leadership has chosen in recent months to forget the next generation and break that basic promise and to wander from that common ground that we once shared. I believe it was Thomas Jefferson who said that a politician thinks about the next election, while a statesman thinks about the next generation. Only a few years ago, a former leader of the Republican Party warned this body, "If we don't get our house in order, the financial burden of the baby boom retirees will be crushing for the next generation." Sadly, that message seems to have gotten lost. What I see now from the leadership on the other side of the aisle, raiding the Social Security trust fund, returning us to deficit spending, and in effect handing the bill for this war in Afghanistan and the domestic war against terrorism to our children in the form of a multi-trillion dollar deficit. It seems disingenuous that while the Republican leadership champions nine years of tax cuts for individuals making over $250,000 a year, they also refuse to ask those same people to help pay for this war and the costs of protecting our country from terrorism.

Think about it . . .

We are without question the wealthiest generation of any civilization that has ever walked this earth. We have acquired in this generation, our generation, greater wealth, greater scientific progress, greater luxury—a higher living standard, and done it faster, than any other generation of humans on this planet. We have seen in the past 20 years the average income of the top one percent of earners in this country increase by a staggering $414,000 per year. We have seen the number of millionaires in our society increase by 400 percent over the past 10 years. The rate of home ownership is unsurpassed and has never been higher in this country.

We have recently come through the longest period of economic expansion in the history of this country. Yet we are here today facing a Republican leadership, which refuses to consider the possibility that we might have to ask the richest part of our society to delay the pay of their tax cut. Last year, my Republican colleagues pushed through tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans, tax cuts that eliminated the surplus. They inherited a projected ten-year surplus of $5.6 trillion, and instead of planning for an emergency, instead of planning for an economic downturn, instead of putting some money aside for the future; they assumed the good times would roll forever. Four trillion of that surplus is already gone. Now we have a national emergency, a war to pay for, and instead of being able to tap into that surplus to pay for the war, we have to go into debt, because the Republican tax cuts have already spent the surplus and have generated deficits for the foreseeable future.

Few of those who made these arguments last year, who said that it was irresponsible to spend down the surplus and leave no room for a national emergency, are surprised to find that we are now here on the floor today, faced with a need to raise the debt limit. And the Republican leadership is not even willing to let us have an honest debate, a straight up-and-down vote, on raising that debt limit.

Last night I heard from the other side of the aisle that if my colleagues and I complained about these kinds of parliamentary games, we were not committed to supporting a strong defense. Mr. Speaker, there is no question here that by our actions since September 11th, every member has shown his and her commitment to this war and to supporting our troops abroad. The question before us today should be whether we respond to this challenge by meeting our fiscal responsibilities and pay for the war, not whether we are going to simply stamp our feet and say "give me my tax cut" and pass the bill to the next generation by raiding their Social Security and giving them a deficit.

I firmly believe in the promise of America. I know that a lot of people on both sides of the aisle do too. I would bet that most Americans would agree that it would be better to freeze nine years of tax cuts to the very rich than to raid Social Security and bring up our kids in a multi-trillion dollars of debt.

Mr. Chairman, at the very least we deserve the right to a full and fair debate of these issues. It is time to end the transactional nature of politics exercised by the Republican leadership, which benefits a small group of very rich people, and instead think about the true and undying promise of America.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO BRIG. GEN. CLAUDE B. DONOVAN

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honor to pay tribute to Brig. Gen. Claude B. Donovan. Known as Pat to his friends and family, he has led an incredible life of service to this country. Pat embodies the spirit of my district in Colorado through his perseverance and unfaltering work ethic. I can think of no better way to thank Pat for the contributions he has made then to acknowledge the accomplishments of this man.

Pat learned the value of hard work early on in his life from his mother. After Pat's father passed away when Pat was ten, his mother taught school to support them both. Pat applied that lesson in his schoolwork and earned his entrance into West Point Military Academy. Later in Pat's military career he would continue his education by attending the Command and General Staff College.

General Donovan proudly served his country in the United States military for nearly 30 years. During his time in the military Pat was posted in Germany, Vietnam, and Korea and served in the 82nd Airborne Division. Pat was also the project manager for the M60 Tank Program and the Bradley Fighting Vehicle. He was the commander for the division maintenance battalion in the First Armored Division known as the Big Red One. In addition to his leadership abilities, Pat proved that he also is an educator when he returned to West Point to teach weapons system engineering. His military career was capped off by his service at the Pentagon where he was the Deputy Chief of Staff for Development, Engineering and Acquisition at the United States Army Material Command.

In addition to his selfless service to our country Pat has also given his time and energy to his community. After retirement Pat moved to Ouray, Colorado where he served two terms as Mayor. He has dedicated countless hours to the children of the local school as a volunteer. Pat also recognizes the importance of saving our heritage for the next generation and works to preserve our past through his local historical society. Perhaps most importantly Pat has been a loving husband to his wife Betty who supported him throughout his military career. Together Pat and Betty have four children, one of which followed in his father's footsteps and graduated from West Point and is currently serving as a Major in the Army.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent Brig. Gen. Claude B. "Pat" Donovan. His devotion to this nation and to his community certainly deserves the attention of this body of Congress and this Nation. Pat has gained the respect and admiration of those whose lives he has touched, especially his family. Pat's patriotism and dedication to his community and his family are an example to us all. Thank you Pat for all that you have done for this Nation.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FED UP HIGHER EDUCATION TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2002

HON. HOWARD P. "BUCK" McKEON

OF CALIFORNIA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. McKEON. Mr. Speaker, today I am proud to join several of my colleagues in introducing the FED UP Higher Education Amendments Act of 2002. This legislation is the result of a year-long endeavor to improve the efficiencies and effectiveness of the Title IV student aid programs through the review of overly burdensome and outdated regulations.

Last year, the House Education and the Workforce Committee launched the FED.UP project (short for "Upping the Effectiveness of our Federal Student Aid Programs) to identify and simplify burdensome regulations in the Higher Education Act of 1965 that work against college students and personnel. The initiative, which was started to bring some sense to the regulations that students and the higher education community must deal with on a daily basis, received over 3,000 responses from college officials, administrators and other personnel who operate America's institutions of higher learning. After all of the responses were catalogued, the Department of Education initiated a negotiated rulemaking process to consider the regulatory changes included in the project.

These proposed amendments to the Higher Education Act of 1965 continue this effort to identify and simplify burdensome regulations that work against college students and personnel, and are non-controversial and technical in nature. They provide for improvements that will reduce red tape for colleges and universities and will improve the financial aid process for students. Enacting these changes now will allow the House Education and Workforce Committee to address large, more intricate proposals during the reauthorization of the HEA without being bogged down with technical and clerical issues.

This legislation provides for the streamlining and increased effectiveness of many provisions within the HEA. It extends two provisions beneficial to both students and institutions scheduled to expire on September 30, 2002. Currently, schools with default rates under 10 percent for three consecutive fiscal years may waive a 30-day delay requirement for first-year, first-time borrowers. Schools meeting the same low default rate standard may also request one term loans in a single disbursement, rather than the required multiple disbursements. These provisions act as an incentive to schools to keep their default rates low and assist students in getting access to their loan funds on a more timely basis.

A drafting error during the 1998 reauthorization of the HEA inadvertently removed the eligibility of not-for-profit foreign veterinary schools from participation in the Federal Family Education Loan (FFEL) Program. This legislation will correct that error and keep hundreds of students from losing their loan eligibility.

This legislation also provides clarification for financial aid officers in the return of Title IV funds. It clarifies how the return of Title IV funds should be implemented for schools utilizing clock hours, and what percentage of funds need to be included in any return. The language also makes clear that Leveraging Educational Assistance Partnership funds may be removed from the return of Title IV funds formula due to the mix of State and Federal funds at the school level. It clarifies that students who have been home schooled, and are treated as such under State law, are eligible for admittance into an institution of higher education as defined in the HEA and are eligible to receive financial aid. It also allows aid professionals to use professional judgment in determining financial need for a student who is declared a ward of the court.

This bill allows for the use of technology wherever possible to enhance and improve communication and the transfer of information. This includes reporting by States in providing information on teacher quality and providing students with voter registration materials.

This legislation allows student loan borrowers to receive more timely assistance from their lenders when they are seeking forbearance of loan payments. It allows a lender to accept a request for assistance over the telephone as long as a confirmation notice of the agreement reached is provided to the borrower and the borrower's file is updated. This eliminates the need for borrowers to sign paper documents requesting help and agreeing in writing to what they already have agreed to verbally. This language also aligns a rehabilitation provision within the Perkins Loan Program with the Federal Family Education Loan Program.

The FED UP Technical Amendments Act corrects an administrative issue in the payment of insurance to lenders and reinsurance to guaranty agencies on borrower default claims when the borrower failed to establish eligibility for that loan. This change reinstates long-standing policy of the Department of Education in the payment of these specific claims, which was altered by a new reporting process put in place via a forms change.

This legislation allows Hispanic Serving Institutions (HSIs) to apply for HSI grants without having to wait two years in between applications. It also clarifies allowable uses of grant funds within the Thurgood Marshall Legal Educational Opportunity Program. It also provides clarification within the Federal TRIO programs that institutions with more than one campus may apply for separate grants to serve different populations at different campuses.

This legislation also provides clarification as to what items must be included within the annual report of the Department of Education's Performance Based Organization (PBO). Finally, the bill corrects the names of the authorizing committees throughout the HEA and corrects a citation to a section of the law that had been changed several years ago.

The FED UP Higher Education Technical Amendments Act of 2002 will take us one step closer to reducing burdensome rules and allowing financial aid administrators and others in the higher education community to do their jobs more efficiently and effectively. Program integrity and service to students remain the priority and this legislation accomplishes both.

FEDUP has accomplished its goal of streamlining the current regulatory system to the extent possible, while maintaining or improving program integrity and I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN Z. SHEARER, ROBERT KOENIG, ALMA COLLINS AND MARGE ROSSITER

HON. BILL SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize four residents in my district, John Z. Shearer, Robert Koenig, Alma Collins, and Marge Rossiter for each being named a volunteer of the year by four member organizations of the South Central Directors of Volunteers Association. Each of these individuals have given their communities a great service by giving of themselves and their time. Their service is a tremendous gift to the many people they help.

John Z. Shearer was recognized by the Franklin County Volunteer Transportation Network for driving more that 1,000 miles since November and donating 43 hours to provide transportation to people in need of medical services outside Franklin County. In addition to this work, Mr. Shearer also volunteers for the Toy Mission, Kiwanis, Meals on Wheels, and directs/manages the chorus of AARP Falling Spring Chapter 280.

Robert Koenig was recognized by the Franklin County Literacy Council for being a volunteer tutor and assisting with fund-raising and special projects. In addition to his work at the council, Mr. Koenig also volunteers at the Ragged Edge Library and with the Scotland School for Veterans Children football team.

Alma Collins was recognized by the Shook Home and The Quarters At Shook for her positive attitude, reliability, and willingness to help.

Marge Rossiter was recognized by the Volunteer Association of South Mountain Restoration Center for being a volunteer since 1977, serving her third term as president of the association and serving as chairperson for another of the association's volunteer groups, International Party Givers.

The services these volunteers provide do not come with a price, but the dividends of their work are precious and valuable. They have given their time unselfishly and have asked for nothing in return. Through their example we learn that a smile, a thank you, or just the knowledge that you have done a good deed can provide a personal reward that fills the corners of your heart in ways that a paycheck will never be big enough to do.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in thanking all volunteers for their noble work and congratulating John Z. Shearer, Robert Koenig, Alma Collins, and Marge Rossiter for receiving the recognition of volunteer of the year. I would also like to put forth a challenge to young people, in my district as well as other parts of the country, to follow in the footsteps of these individuals. President George W. Bush, in his last State of the Union Address, challenged all of us to give two years or 4,000 hours of service over our lifetimes. If the President were here today I am positive he would shake these four volunteers' hands and hold them up as examples for others to follow. Our communities are in need of volunteers, people that are willing to provide a helping hand and give from their hearts. This country has a generous spirit of goodwill and kindness, I urge others to use this as their motivation to become as involved in bettering their communities as the four volunteers we have recognized today.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the primary function of the National Transportation Safety Board primary function is to promote safety in transportation. The Board is responsible for the investigation, determination of facts, conditions, and circumstances and the cause or probable cause or causes of. The Board makes transportation safety recommendations to Federal, State, and local agencies and private organizations to reduce the likelihood of recurrences of transportation accidents. The Board issues reports and orders pursuant to its duties to determine the cause of transportation accidents and to report the facts, conditions and circumstances relating to such accidents.

Since its last reauthorization in 2000, the Board has investigated over 6,500 accidents. The NTSB has issued over 650 safety recommendations. To maintain its position as the world's preeminent investigative agency, the NTSB must have the resources necessary to handle the increasingly complex accident investigations. The NTSB has recently broken ground for its new training academy that will teach state of the art investigative techniques for transportation accidents.

Although it has no regulatory or enforcement powers, its reputation for impartiality and thoroughness has enabled the NTSB to achieve such success in shaping transportation safety improvements that more than 80 percent of its recommendations have been adopted by those in a position to effect change.

Many safety features currently incorporated into airplanes, automobiles, trains, pipelines and marine vessels had their genesis in NTSB recommendations. At an annual cost of less than 23 cents a citizen, the NTSB is one of the best bargains in the government.

H.R. 4466, National Transportation Safety Board Reauthorization Act authorizes increased funding over the next three years: $73 million in FY 2003; $85 million in FY 2004; and $89.7 million in FY 2005. The bill also authorizes approximately $4 million per year for the training academy. This funding is critical to ensure that the Agency has the necessary resources to hire additional technical experts as well as to provide better training for its current workforce.

H.R. 4466 also addresses another matter of great importance; that is, the DOT's notoriously slow response to NTSB's safety recommendations. The bill requires an annual report from DOT on the regulatory status of all significant safety recommendations (i.e., those on NTSB's "most wanted list") received from the NTSB. This will enable the Committee to keep tabs on the progress of these very important recommendations.

One of the NTSB's core functions is to assist families of passengers that have been in an aviation accident. H.R. 4466 also extends the NTSB's family assistance responsibility to families of victims of rail accidents. In addition, Congress, in 2000, authorized the transfer of investigative priority from the NTSB to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the event of an accident caused by an intentional criminal act. H.R. 4466 provides for the transfer of the family affairs responsibility to the FBI from the NTSB when investigative authority has been relinquished in both aviation and rail accidents.

Having a well funded, well-trained NTSB workforce is of the utmost importance for the American traveling public. Accordingly, I urge my fellow members to strongly support the bill.

IS INDIA AN ALLY OR A TERRORIST STATE?

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, recently, the news website NewsMax.com ran a vary comprehensive article called "India: Allies or Instigators?" It details India's pattern of abuse against the Christians, Sikhs, Muslims, and other minorities, its anti-Americanism, and its support of terrorism against its neighbors.

The article shows that the Indian government has killed tens of thousands of Sikhs, Christians, Muslims, and other minorities; that it holds tens of thousands of political prisoners; and it is funding terrorism in Pakistan and created and supported the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), an organization the U.S. government has called a "terrorist" organization. It shows India's domestic terrorism against Sikhs, Christians, Muslims, and all the other minority groups.

Reading this article should cause any fair-minded reader to ask whether or not India is a terrorist state seeking hegemony in South Asia and questions whether India is a country we should trust as an ally. The United States should work for freedom for all the people of the subcontinent. I was proud to be one of 42 Members of Congress from both parties who signed a letter urging President Bush to press for the release of Sikh and other political prisoners in India. The Administration should do that. But it should do more.

After reading this article, it is clearly time for the U.S. government to cut off its aid to India and to come out in support of self-determination for all the peoples and nations of South Asia. This is the best way to spread liberty, democracy, prosperity, and true stability to the subcontinent.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to place the article into the RECORD at this time. I urge my colleagues and all people interested in South Asian affairs to read it.

INDIA: ALLIES OR INSTIGATORS?

(By Tim Phares)

Trouble is brewing again in South Asia, as India and Pakistan move troops to their border. The recent violence in Gujarat, in which over 540 people have been killed, has merely heightened tensions.

It follows an attack by Muslims on a train full of Hindu activists headed for Ayodhya, where the BJP government in India is seeking to build a Hindu temple on the site where the most revered mosque in India was destroyed by Hindu militants a few years ago. It was reported that the passengers were taunting the Muslims by chanting slogans about rebuilding the temple.

Unfortunately, India, which proclaims itself "the world's largest democracy," has made moves that undermine America's war on terrorism. Indian military maneuvers have forced Pakistan to divert troops from the border with Afghanistan to the Line of Control in Kashmir, creating a potential opening for terrorists to escape.

On January 2, Tony Blankley wrote in the Washington Times that India is sponsoring cross-border terrorism in the Pakistani province of Sindh.

Journalist Tavleen Singh has reported in India's leading newsmagazine, India Today, that the Indian government created the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), which the U.S. government has identified as a "terrorist organization."

According to Internet journalist Justin Raimondo, the Indian Defense Minister, George Fernandes, raised money and arms for the LTTE.

Pakistan and minorities within India's borders charge that India is seeking hegemony in the South Asian subcontinent. Certainly its deployment of new missiles that can reach deep into Pakistan and its tests that began the nuclear escalation in the region suggest that this may be true.

While India blames Pakistan for the attack on its Parliament, President Pervez Musharraf says he has evidence that the Indian government itself was responsible. No Indian soldiers were killed, just guards, workers, and other lower-caste people.

The book Soft Target, written by Canadian journalists Brian McAndrew of the Toronto Star and Zuhair Kashmeri of the Toronto Globe and Mail, shows that India blew up its own airliner in 1985, killing 329 people, apparently in order to blame Sikhs for the atrocity and create a pretext for more violence against them.

It shows that the Indian Consul General in Toronto pulled his daughter off the flight shortly before it was due to depart. An auto dealer who was a friend of the Consul General also cancelled his reservation at the last minute. Surinder Singh, director of North American Affairs for the External Affairs office in New Delhi, also cancelled his reservation on that flight. The Consul General also called to finger a suspect in the case before the public knew that the bombing had taken place. The book quotes an agent of the Canadian State Investigative Service (CSIS) as saying, "If you really want to clear the incidents quickly. take vans down to the Indian High Commission and the consulates in Toronto and Vancouver, load up everybody and take them down for questioning. We know it and they know it that they are involved."

India has a long record of Anti-Americanism. On May 18, 1999, The Indian Express reported that Mr. Fernandes, the Defense Minister, organized and led a meeting with the Ambassadors from Red China, Cuba, Russia, Yugoslavia, Libya, and Iraq to discuss setting up a security alliance "to stop the U.S."

India votes against the United States at the United Nations more often than any country except Cuba, It had a long term friendship with the former Soviet Union and supported its invasion of Afghanistan.

India's implicit support for terrorist activity is consistent with its internal behavior. It has a record of repression of minorities that undermines its proclamation of democratic values.

The ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), which leads a 23-party coalition, is a branch of the Rashtriya Swayamsewak Sangh (RSS), an organization founded in 1925 in support of the Fascists.

The governing ideology of the BJP and all the branches of the RSS is Hindutva, the subjugation of society, politics, and culture to Hinduism. Last year, a cabinet member said that everyone living in India must either be a Hindu or be subservient to Hinduism. And in New York in 2000, Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee said, "I will always be a Swayamsewak." This is the ideology behind the attacks on Christians, Sikhs, Muslims, and other minorities.

The target of choice these days seems to be Christians. Human-rights organizations report that more than 200,000 Christians in Negaland have been killed by the Indian government.

On February 17, the Associated Press reported an attack on the Catholic church on the outskirts of Bangalore in which several people were injured. The assailants threw stones at the church, then broke in, breaking furniture and smashing windows before attacking worshipers. the February 25 issue of the Washington Times reported another church attack in which 20 people were wounded.

In February, two church workers and a teenage boy were shot at while they prayed. The boy was injured. Two Christian missionaries were beaten with iron rods while they rode their bicycles home. A Christian cemetery in Port Blair was vandalized.

These attacks continue a pattern of oppression of Christians that has been going on heavily since Christmas 1998. Since then, members of the RSS have murdered priests, raped nuns, burned churches, and committed other atrocities with impunity.

The RSS published a booklet last year detailing how to file false criminal cases against Christians and other religious minorities. The RSS objects to the presence of missionaries in India.

The missionaries are having a good deal of success in converting members of the lower castes, especially Dalits, also known as "Untouchables." This removes the lower-caste people from the stratification of the caste system, which is essential to the Hindu religion and social structure.

RSS activists also burned a missionary and his two sons to death while they slept in their jeep. They surrounded the jeep and chanted "Victory to Hannuman," a Hindu god. Now the Indian authorities have found a single individual to blame and they are moving to throw the missionary's widow out of the country. In 1997, Indian police broke up a Christian religious festival with gunfire.

In 1994, the U.S. State Department reported that the Indian government paid out over 41,000 cash bounties to police officers for killing members of the Sikh minority. In the same year, the Indian newspaper Hitavada reported that the Indian government paid the late governor of Punjab, Surendra Nath, the equivalent of $1.5 billion to foment terrorist activity in Punjab and in Kashmir.

According to the book The Politics of Genocide, over 250,000 Sikhs have been killed by the Indian government's forces. According to human-rights groups, Indian forces have killed over 75,000 Muslims in Kashmir and thousands of other minorities, including Dalit "untouchables," Tamils, and other groups.

A report issued last year by the Movement Against State Repression (MASR) showed that India admitted to holding 52,268 political prisoners. Amnesty International reports that tens of thousands of other minorities are also being held as political prisoners.

These prisoners continue to be held under a law called the "Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act" (TADA), which expired in 1995, It empowered the government to hold people virtually indefinitely for any offense or for no offense at all.

According to many reports, some of these political prisoners have been in custody for almost two decades. Amnesty International reported last year that tens of thousands of minorities are big held as political prisoners. On February 28, 42 Members of the U.S. Congress wrote to President Bush asking him to work for freedom for these political prisoners.

MASR also co-sponsored with the Punjab Human Rights Organization an Investigation of the March 2000 massacre of 35 Sikhs in Chithisinghpora. It concluded that Indian forces carried out the massacre. A separate investigation conducted by the International Human Rights Organization came to the same conclusion.

As Rep. Dana Rohrabacher (R–Cal.) said on the floor of Congress on August 2, 1999, "for the people in Kashmir and Punjab and Jammu, India might as well be Nazi Germany."

In the words of Narinder Singh, a spokesman for the Golden Temple, the seat of the Sikh religion, who was interviewed in August 1997 by National Public Radio, "The Indian government, all the time they boast that they are secular, that they are democratic. But they have nothing to do with a democracy, nothing to do with a secularism. They just kill Sikhs to please the majority."

In the March 4 issue of Forbes, Steve Forbes compared India to the Austro-Hungarian Empire, arguing that as a multinational State, India is inherently unstable. Prior to the British conquest of the subcontinent, there was no political entity called India. It was a series of princely states brought together by the British.

The Kashmiri people were promised a referendum on their status in 1948, but that vote has never been held. The Sikhs, who were supposed to receive independence, have never had any of their representatives sign the Indian constitution. Instead of respecting "the glow of freedom" that Nehru and Patel promised the Sikhs, the government declared them a "criminal class" as the ink was dry on the constitution. Currently, 17 freedom movements are going on within India's borders.

Some Members of Congress have called for sanctions against India and for an end to American aid. Some have also endorsed self-determination for the peoples seeking freedom from India through a plebiscite on independence. While these events seem unlikely to occur any time soon, the Indian government has held negotiations with the freedom fighters in predominantly Christian Nagaland. Home Minister L.K. Advani recently admitted that if Kashmir achieves freedom (which now seems more likely than ever), it will cause India to break apart.

Some experts have predicted that within a decade, neither India nor Pakistan will exist in the form we know them presently. The Indian subcontinent will continue to be a region that bears close attention by American policymakers.

NURSING HOME RESIDENT SAFETY ASSURANCE ACT

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Nursing Home Resident Safety Assurance Act, legislation to require background checks on indirect care personnel in our nation's nursing homes.

Currently, there are 17,000 nursing homes in the United States where approximately 1.5 million of our nation's seniors reside. A 1999 study conducted by the House Government Reform Committee analyzed two years of state inspection and complaint investigation reports of nursing homes and revealed that abuse of nursing home residents is a widespread, serious problem. Specifically, over 30 percent of nursing homes in the United States, or 5,283 facilities, were cited for an abuse violation between January 1, 1999 and January 1, 2001. During the two-year period of the report, these nursing homes were cited for 8,972 violations. The most frequent violations were failure to properly investigate and report allegations of resident abuse or failure to ensure that nursing home staff had no record of abusing, neglecting or mistreating residents. For this reason, Congress must take additional action to protect seniors receiving care in our nation's nursing homes.

My legislation, the Nursing Home Resident Safety Assurance Act is an important step towards achieving that goal. The bill would amend Public Law 105–277, which currently requires federal criminal background checks on direct care personnel to also allow background checks on indirect care personnel such as maintenance workers, janitors and dietary staff. These individuals have direct access to seniors in nursing homes without completing the screening procedures that direct care personnel, such as physical therapists and licensed nurse practitioners are required to have. The current loophole in the law puts our society's most vulnerable members, the elderly and disabled in circumstances rife with opportunities for abuse and exploitation.

The state of North Carolina recognized this potential for abuse and the state legislature passed legislation requiring criminal background checks for both direct and indirect care nursing home personnel who have not lived in North Carolina for 5 years. Public Law 105–277 hinders this background check process by preventing the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) from releasing background information on indirect care personnel.

Amending this law to require criminal background checks on all nursing home personnel would send a message that Congress is serious about protecting the welfare of our Nation's seniors. Please join me in supporting the Nursing Home Resident Safety Assurance Act, common sense legislation to protect our nation's most vulnerable citizens.

DONATION OF A PIECE OF THE BERLIN WALL

HON. BOB BARR

OF GEORGIA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the gift of a piece of the Berlin Wall to my good friend, Georgia State Senator Chuck Clay. The grandson of General Lucius Clay, who spearheaded the 1949 Berlin Air Lift that saved West Berlin from a Soviet invasion, and its citizens from starvation, Senator Clay is an appropriate recipient of this gift that recognizes one of our greatest military heroes. I am proud to represent the Marietta community in the United States House of Representatives.

The importance of General Clay's efforts during the Cold War cannot be overstated. After serving his county in the Second World War, he earned the Distinguished Service Medal. Later, he became commander of the U.S. armed forces in Europe, as well as the military governor of Germany. With his endeavors to make the Air Lift a success, he united the American and Berlin people in a friendship that has continued to this date. Yet even after retiring from the army, General Clay remained involved in a life of service as an advisor to President Eisenhower, an Ambassador to Berlin under President Kennedy, and as a member of countless committees on civic affairs.

I am honored to be able to assist in bringing this piece of the Berlin Wall to the Marietta community. I know that my colleagues join in recognizing its symbolic importance to German-American friendship, and will join me in hallowing the efforts of those who gave so much to make this possible.

TRIBUTE TO 2001–2002 SACRAMENTO KINGS

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to the 2001–2002 Sacramento Kings, one of the most exciting and formidable teams in the National Basketball Association. The 2001–2002 Kings completed the greatest season in franchise history by taking the two-time defending World Champions, the Los Angeles Lakers, to the brink of elimination in a fiercely contested seven game series. Although the season ended short of a Championship, the 2001–2002 Kings demonstrated remarkable courage, determination, and promise that have surely made them a great source of civic pride and a perennial NBA powerhouse for years to come. I ask all of my colleagues to join with me in saluting the remarkable 2001–2002 Sacramento Kings.

Throughout the course of the season, the 2001–2002 Sacramento Kings showed tremendous character in overcoming numerous obstacles. Despite losing star players Chris Webber and Peja Stojakovic for significant portions of the season, the Kings finished the regular season with a league best mark of 61 wins and 21 losses. The Kings won the franchise's first division championship since relocating to Sacramento in 1985. By combining a high-octane offense and a tenacious defense, this year's Kings posted the best overall record, home record and road record in franchise history. It is clear that the 2001–2002 Sacramento Kings are the most successful team in the franchise's illustrious 54 year history.

The Kings began their postseason campaign in fine form, as they only needed four games to conquer their old nemesis, the Utah Jazz. In the next round, the Kings overcame significant injuries to Peredrag Stojakovic and Doug Christie to defeat a talented Dallas Mavericks team by a four games to one margin. In the Western Conference finals, the Kings locked horns with the Los Angeles Lakers in one of the most hotly contested and memorable playoff series in NBA history. Although the Kings would lose the series after stretching the ultimate seventh game into overtime, their outstanding performance throughout the playoffs cemented the Kings' status as one of the preeminent teams in the NBA today and the dominant team of the future.

The 2001–2002 Sacramento Kings are comprised of an outstanding blend of superstar players, seasoned veterans, and exciting young players. This Kings team is spearheaded by the all around excellence of All-Stars Chris Webber and Peredrag Stojakovic. On defense, the Kings are lead by defensive stalwart and All NBA Defensive Second Team member Doug Christie. Skillful big men Vlade Divac, Scot Pollard, and Lawrence Funderburke provide consistent play in the paint. The boundless energy and exuberance of Mike Bibby, Bobby Jackson, and Hidayet Turkoglu fuels the Kings trademark high-power offense. High-flying rookie Gerald Wallace and the talented Mateen Cleaves provide an enticing glimpse into the team's future with their enormous potential. To round off the roster, solid veterans Chucky Brown and Brent Price provide steady and valuable leadership on the floor and in the locker room. This dazzling group of players, combined with a selfless commitment to team play, are major reasons why the Kings enjoyed such unparalleled success during the 2001–2002 season.

In addition to a wonderful roster, the 2001–2002 Kings also benefited greatly from the tutelage of one of the best coaching staffs and the leadership of one of the most progressive front offices in the NBA. On the bench, the 2001–2002 Kings were led by head coach Rick Adelman and assistant coaches Pete Carril, John Wetzel and Elston Turner. These coaches were able to harness one of the greatest collections of talented players in the NBA into a balanced scoring team that is epitomized by team play and an unyielding commitment to defense. In the front office, the Kings are led by the visionary ownership of the Maloof Family and the astute personnel moves of team president Geoff Petrie. Under the ownership of the Maloof Family, the Kings have taken great steps to forge one of the most unique and strongest relationships in all of sports with their team supporters. Given the Kings' front office's commitment to the city of Sacramento, it is no wonder why Kings fans are widely regarded as the most spirited and most loyal fans in America.

Mr. Speaker, as the Sacramento Kings conclude its greatest season in franchise history and prepare to achieve greater triumphs in the future, I am honored to pay tribute to the many hard working men and women of the Kings organization who brought so much joy and pride to the people of Sacramento and Kings' fans everywhere. Their successes are considerable, and it is a great honor for me to have the opportunity to pay tribute to their accomplishments. I ask all my colleagues to join with me in congratulating the Sacramento Kings on a wonderful season and wishing them greater success in future seasons.

OF MICHIGAN

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize Harrison Township, whose outstanding dedication and commitment to the service of its community has led to a great accomplishment. On Tuesday, May 28, 2002, Harrison Township celebrated its 175th Anniversary, commemorating 175 years of civic excellence.

This year, as the community of Harrison Township gathered together to honor Memorial Day, they also had the distinct honor of celebrating the 175th Anniversary of Harrison Township.

Harrison Township today is a flourishing center of civic and social activities and resources for families of the community. With a great emphasis on community service, Harrison Township has opened its doors throughout the years to welcome community members to civic gatherings, conferences, club meetings, and events for the entire family.

Township for its leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating them on this landmark occasion.

HONORING THE SERVICE OF AMANDA SCHAECHER

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Amanda Schaecher, who deserves our thanks and recognition for her efforts to make sure our troops and veterans are not forgotten. When Amanda was crowned Miss Henry County Fair, she had no specific cause to promote or project for which she wanted to raise funds. But following the terrorist attacks of September 11, a cause found her. She has used whatever resources were at her disposal as queen to help our troops and veterans.

Last November, in honor of Veteran's Day, Amanda printed special certificates of recognition which she presented, along with an American flag, to more than 50 veterans residing in nursing homes and independent living centers in Henry County.

Just before Christmas, she launched an ongoing project to encourage contributions to the USO, so current troops overseas are not forgotten. She has recorded public service announcements for local radio stations and placed a public service ad in the Kewanee Star Courier newspaper and taped up posters at various locations around Henry County.

Earlier this year, when she heard the Kewanee National Guard unit would not be able to hold its annual fundraiser at its armory because of heightened security precautions, she arranged for it to be held at Wethersfield High School.

There are many examples of patriotism and service in the aftermath of Sept. 11. Amanda Schaecher exemplifies those values. The time, talent and energy she has given cannot be calculated—they are priceless.

Our veterans and military personnel have no better friend and supporter than Amanda. I am proud and honored to recognize her tireless and extraordinary efforts. I join the entire community and America's veterans and military personnel in thanking and honoring Amanda.

HONORING THE WORK OF THE COMMUNITY FOOD BANK OF NEW JERSEY

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, today has been designated by America's Second Harvest as the First Annual Hunger Awareness Day. I would like to ask my colleagues here in the United States House of Representatives to join me in recognizing the dedicated work of the Community Food Bank of New Jersey, whose mission is to fight hunger and poverty.

Many individuals and families in need benefit from the efforts of the Community Food Bank and its associated food banks, which provide assistance to emergency feeding programs in 18 of New Jersey's 21 counties. Today, representatives from those counties will gather at the Food Bank to issue a call to action. Participants will include recipients of emergency food, who will share their stories; staff from soup kitchens and shelters; volunteers; and donors of food and funds. The goal of the Hunger Awareness Forum is to highlight what is happening in New Jersey, to reveal how many are hungry in our State, and to discuss how all of us can work together to see that no one from New Jersey is without food. The Community Food Bank is the vital link between the food industry and the charitable organizations which serve the needy in our community.

Activities are being planned throughout the nation today to raise awareness of the need to address hunger both nationally and locally. The theme of this initiative is "Nobody in America Should Go Hungry."

Mr. Speaker, as Congress addresses the issue of hunger, it is fitting that we take a moment to honor the efforts of the staff and volunteers who have made the Community Food Bank of New Jersey such a successful resource for our communities. Let us thank them for assisting countless individuals and families through this labor of love.

TRIBUTE TO DR. FRANZ B. HUMER

HON. BILL PASCRELL, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to take this opportunity to recognize the work of an outstanding individual, Dr. Franz B. Humer, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Roche Holdings, Ltd, one of the world's leading healthcare companies whose United States headquarters is located in my district, in Nutley, New Jersey.

On Wednesday, May 22, Dr. Humer was honored along with Leah Tutu, the wife of Bishop Desmond Tutu, at the Phelophepa Health Care Train Gala dinner in New York City. My obligations here in Washington caused me to miss the event, which I am told was a tremendous success.

It is only fitting that Dr. Humer be honored, in this, the permanent record of the greatest freely elected body on earth, for his steadfast leadership in providing long term support he and Hoffmann-La Roche have given to South Africa's neediest citizens.

The Phelophepa Health Care Train, a South African charity, provides remote primary health care to rural South Africa via locomotive train. Now in its 9th year of operation, the Phelophepa Train continues reaching out and striving to better the lives of thousands of rural people by bringing basic health services, outreach programs, AIDS education, and training and health information to areas where such services are not available.

Under the exceptional leadership of Dr. Humer, Hoffmann-La Roche's generous assistance has enabled the Phelophepa Train to achieve unprecedented success in its efforts to provide essential health care to the people of South Africa. Dr. Humer and Hoffmann-La Roche deserve recognition for their efforts to better the lives of desperately needy persons halfway across the globe.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join our colleagues, Hoffman-La Rouche, the people of South Africa, and me in recognizing the outstanding humanitarian efforts of Dr. Franz Humer, and congratulating him on this great honor.

TRIBUTE TO FELLOWSHIP CHAPEL

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize Fellowship Chapel, which celebrated its 36h Anniversary on Sunday, June 2, 2002. Truly a milestone occasion, this celebration gives testament to the outstanding dedication and commitment of the entire church and community.

Founded in 1966, Fellowship Chapel began humbly, with worship services and holiday celebrations for its members. Decades later, Fellowship Chapel has come far, recently celebrating the ground-breaking ceremony of its beautiful, new church complex in January of 2002. Fellowship Chapel has truly led this community in spirituality and services, opening its doors to welcome members and their families for generations.

Through much prayer, sacrifice, and hard work, the congregation of Fellowship Chapel has only grown stronger and more dedicated to its mission. With a variety of ministries and departments for religious education, charitable programs, social events and activities for the entire family, Fellowship Chapel is truly advancing in its mission to reach out into the community and bring families together. With the new construction underway, religious education, church activities, and official services will only become greater and this community will continue to succeed in its crusade to improve the lives of people through faith and God.

Although history and time have changed the congregation, the spirit of the church has remained strong. I would like to personally congratulate Fellowship Chapel on their 36th Anniversary, and I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing them on this landmark occasion.

WELFARE REAUTHORIZATION AND CHARITABLE CHOICE

HON. CHET EDWARDS

OF TEXAS

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Congress, I believe that we have a responsibility to continue to review and revise legislation that adapts and improves upon program successes and the ever-changing needs of American citizens. That is why I support H.R. 4737, the Personal Responsibility, Work, and Family Promotion Act of 2002. This legislation reauthorizes the 1996 welfare reform program, a program that works to move welfare recipients from the dependency of these programs to self-sufficiency.

However, while I support this welfare reauthorization, I do not support a provision included in the original 1996 legislation and again included in this reauthorization. This provision is known as Charitable Choice, and in my opinion, the wrong solution to a real problem. Under current law, faith-based groups may already accept federal dollars under three conditions: they cannot be pervasively sectarian, they cannot proselytize, and they cannot discriminate on the basis of religion in their employment practices.

Charitable Choice changes those conditions. Charitable Choice makes it possible for the government to subsidize churches and other thoroughly religious entities that provide social services. This proposal will provide tax dollars to religious groups and open the door to government review of church activities.

For many years the law has permitted groups that are affiliated with religious bodies (e.g. Catholic Charities and Lutheran Social Services, Jewish Federations) to receive tax funds to provide secular social services. But Charitable Choice represents a radical and misguided revision of the law. Indeed, many ministers believe that Charitable Choice will do great harm to religion.

Because regulation always follows tax funds, Charitable Choice opens the door to invasive government monitoring, regulation and accounting of churches, clergy, and other leaders of the church. For these reasons, people like Freddy Garcia, who runs the highly successful Victory Fellowship ministry for drug addicts in San Antonio, has said, "I don't want any grants. I'm a church . . . All I want is for the government to leave me alone."

Also, because there is limited money in the public purse and thousands of religious groups in our country, Charitable Choice will force the government to pick and choose which religions it funds. Churches may have to compete for government grants before elected legislators. "The best way I know of to destroy religion is to have all the churches fighting over a big pot of money, " says Rev. J. Brent Walker, general counsel of the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs.

Charitable Choice will generate serious problems that have not been seen on a large scale in this country in over 200 years—outright religious infighting, intolerance and discrimination.

If we allow government to fund and become involved in religion, it will harm religion, not help it. It is people of faith who must point out that church-state separation does not mean keeping people of faith from being involved in government but rather it means keeping government from being involved in religion.

I will continue to work with my colleagues to provide a welfare program that helps the needs of all American citizens, without compromising religious freedom and liberty. I would hope that we, as Members of Congress, remember our obligations to uphold the principles of the Constitution and create legislation, which represents the core and steadfast beliefs of the United States.

IN SUPPORT OF THE HDTV TRANSITION

HON. GENE GREEN

OF TEXAS

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of an exciting new technology. Local television broadcasters across the country are undertaking their biggest advancement in years: the transition to digital television. These stations aim to provide new services to their viewers, our constituents. Digital TV opens the door to new possibilities like High Definition TV, interactive television, and expanded programming options and choices.

The stations in Houston that serve my district are already transmitting digital signals. I am proud of my hometown broadcasters: the CBS affiliate KHOU, which is owned by the Texas based Belo Corporation; KPRC, owned by Post-Newsweek; KTRK, owned by ABC; KRIV and KTXH owned by FOX; KUHT; and my local PBS station. These local broadcasters are leading the charge into the future.

These TV stations are small businesses like any other. They have made substantial investments in new transmitting facilities, new production equipment, and in some cases new broadcast towers. Collectively, the broadcast industry has invested over a billion dollars in the future of free, over-the-air digital television.

The digital transition will accelerate significantly as more television sets with digital tuners are manufactured. Like any technology, digital television sets started out as expensive, but are rapidly becoming more affordable. The prices for digital television sets have dropped fifty percent in the last two years and continue dropping today. I look forward to a day when digital television tuners are so widespread that all consumers can afford to make the conversion and receive their local stations' free digital signals.

The transition to digital television will be, undoubtedly, a multi-step process. In the meantime, I am proud of my hometown stations for leading the way. Let me offer my thanks and congratulations to them for flipping the digital switch.

A TRIBUTE TO UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA LEGEND PAUL GIEL: TWO-SPORT ALL-AMERICAN, UNIVERSITY ATHLETIC DIRECTOR AND BELOVED HERO

HON. JIM RAMSTAD

OF MINNESOTA

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a true Minnesota sports legend, devoted family person, and wonderful friend—Paul Giel—who passed away suddenly on May 22, 2002.

Paul Giel—All-American football and baseball player at the University of Minnesota from 1951 to 1954; Major League Baseball pitcher from 1954 to 1961; Sports broadcaster and director for WCCO Radio for eight years; Athletic Director at the University of Minnesota for 18 years; and Vice President of Public Affairs for the Minneapolis Heart Institute the past 12 years.

As great as Paul Giel's athletic and professional achievements were, Paul was an even greater person.

Legendary Minneapolis Star Tribune sportswriter Sid Hartman said it well, "If there ever were a role model for the young athlete in high school or college, it had to be Paul Giel. Success on the field only made him a better person off it."

WCCO's Ray Christensen, our state's beloved sports announcer who started doing football broadcasts in 1951—when Paul Giel was a sophomore—said this about Paul Giel: "Paul was a winner in every way, but most important, I think he was a winner as a person. When you earn so many rewards as a player, as an athletic director and in other ways in sports, sometimes you forget to be a person. And Paul never forgot."

Born and raised in Winona in southeastern Minnesota, Paul Giel was a 5–11, 185-pound single-wing tailback at the University of Minnesota. He ran and passed for 4,110 yards and 35 touchdowns and finished a close second to Notre Dame's Johnny Lattner in the Heisman Trophy voting his senior year.

Paul Giel is a member of the National Football Foundation's College Hall of Fame. He was a two-time All-American in football and the Most Valuable Player in the Big Ten.

In baseball, Paul Giel was also an All-American. He won 21 college games from 1952 to 1954, and he pitched for four major league teams from 1954 to 1961.

For 18 years starting in 1972, Paul Giel was the Athletic Director at the University of Minnesota. He was the man who hired Herb Brooks as hockey coach, and Herbie recently recalled Paul's words when he was hired: "Listen, I'm just new to this job. I don't know rules and regulations, everything else," he said, "but do what's right. Don't break any rules. Do what's right."

"People believed in Paul Giel," said Herb Brooks. "Parents believed in him. Players believed in Paul Giel."

Mr. Speaker, all Minnesotans believed in Paul Giel, and their faith in him was always rewarded. Paul Giel was a man of great character and principle, especially when it came to the place he loved more than any other, the University of Minnesota.

"I don't think I've ever known anyone who cared more or who was more loyal to the University of Minnesota than Paul Giel," said Tom Moe, University of Minnesota Athletic Director. "He was a tremendous friend. I just had tremendous admiration for him. I'm sick. It's a sad day for Minnesotans."

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it's a sad day to lose a Minnesota legend, our humble hero and All-American in every way he lived his life.

Our thoughts and prayers go out to Paul's loving wife, Nancy, their three wonderful children, Paul Jr., Gerilyn, Tommy, their spouses and his six grandchildren. Paul also dearly loved his mother and father-in-law, Colonel and Mrs. Tom Davis, as well as his sister Ruth and brother Edward.

Paul Giel's legacy will continue to live in the hearts of every Minnesotan who knew and loved him.

Thanks "Old Number 10" for all the great memories and for always making Minnesota proud.

HONORING THE LAO-HMONG PEOPLE FOR THEIR LOYALTY AND FRIENDSHIP

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the Lao-Hmong American Coalition to thank my colleagues in both the House and Senate for their unanimous vote in favor of a National Lao-Hmong Recognition Day. Mr. Yang Chee, president of the Lao-Hmong American Coalition, has asked me to relay his own deep gratitude to the United States Congress for passing this historic proclamation.

During the Vietnam War, the Lao-Hmong people were one of this country's most loyal allies. They fought alongside U.S. soldiers against the communists and the North Vietnamese, sacrificing their lives for freedom and democracy. Many of these brave people now call this country their home, becoming an integral part of American society. I would like to take this opportunity to thank Mr. Chee and all of the Lao-Hmong people for their dedication to this country and its ideals.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution proclaiming National Lao-Hmong Recognition Day was passed unanimously through both Houses of Congress. Once again, I thank my colleagues for their support, and it is my hope that President Bush will join us in expressing the gratitude of this nation to the Lao-Hmong people.

This long-overdue day of recognition will take place in July. May it promote a sense of understanding and appreciation for the sacrifices made in the name of freedom and democracy. I urge all Americans to take a moment on this day to thank our brave and loyal friends, the Lao-Hmong.

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, May 22, 2002, I was unavoidably absent for rollcall votes 195 and 196. TRIBUTE TO GEORGENE BRODIE

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Georgene Brodie, a dedicated wife, mother and teacher who has faced life with courage, compassion and strength. Georgene is suffering from ALS (Lou Gehrig's Disease), and she is using the time she has left to help others who are suffering from the same disease.

I have been touched by Georgene's enormous capacity to give to others. She founded the Georgene Brodie Foundation for the Future to raise funds for The Johns Hopkins Center for ALS and The Muscular Dystrophy Association. She and her family know that a cure for ALS and other similar diseases will be found only through research and clinical work. The Hopkins Center for ALS Research is the only center in the country dedicated to finding the cure for ALS.

While Georgene may be suffering from ALS, she is much more than the disease that afflicts her. As a teacher, she has dedicated her life to helping young children experience the joy of learning; as a mother she has raised two marvelous daughters—Kimberly and Ellen; and as a Grandmother she has lovingly embraced her four grandchildren, Matthew and Melissa Hopkins and Austin and Andrew Jarrett.

As the wife of M. Jay Brodie, head of the Baltimore Development Corp., she has been one of Baltimore's staunchest cheerleaders. From its neighborhoods, to its artistic and cultural institutions to its ethnic heritage, Georgene loves and appreciates the spirit of Baltimore. In fact, as the owner of the Crab Line, she was one of the original "Harborplace" merchants, helping make Harborplace one of Baltimore's most identifiable landmarks.

I hope my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives will join me in saluting the accomplishments of Georgene Brodie. Her love of life and calmness of spirit has touched all who know and care for her.

RECOGNIZING BELMONT ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Belmont Elementary School in North Babylon, New York for their care and concern following the September 11th tragedy.

After the tragic events of September 11th, the entire student body at Belmont Elementary School decorated a thousand grocery bags with patriotic symbols and slogans. These bags were used to pack groceries for local shoppers and sent a patriotic message into homes that students support their community in a time of need.

These students displayed support for their community as members of Jane Goodall's Roots and Shoots Club. This organization is a global network of students whose objective is to protect the environment and enhance cultural awareness.

Mr. Speaker, I also stand to recognize the efforts of the chapter advisor and administrators involved. Specifically, Seri Doyle, teacher coordinator of Jane Goodall's Roots and Shoots Club, and Alexa Endes, Principal of Belmont Elementary School.

It is with great pride, Mr. Speaker, that I recognize the efforts of these individuals and bring Belmont Elementary School's patriotic deed to the attention of Congress.

SOUTHERN BORDER AIR QUALITY PROTECTION ACT

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I proudly represent the people of Imperial County, California, which is a small community located on the U.S.-Mexico border. As with many border communities, the Imperial County has a good working relationship with their neighbors in Mexico. Unfortunately, they also have to suffer the consequences of Mexico's more lax environmental requirements, especially with respect to air quality. As we all know, air does not respect the international boundaries we put in place and, as a result, border communities are often penalized for activities that are actually happening south of the border and beyond their control.

Such a situation is developing for Imperial County. At least partially due to the heavy regulatory and environmental compliance burdens, electrical generation facilities are locating in Mexico. While some companies are building power plants that meet U.S. standards, for which they should be commended, other companies are choosing to operate dirty plants as opposed to incurring the additional cost of installing the best available emission control devices.

As a result, I am introducing the Southern Border Air Quality Protection Act. This bill takes an immediate and important step in acknowledging that we must consider air pollution a regional issue that does not respect international boundaries. My legislation will prohibit the export of natural gas to any electricity generation facility located in Mexico and within 50 miles of the U.S. that does not meet the air pollution emission rate requirements in the nearest U.S. air quality control region. In addition, the legislation includes a grandfathering clause so that any plants put in service before December 31, 2001 are exempted from this law.

This bill is necessary to protect our border communities from rapidly increasing emissions from unregulated, substandard power plants that leave U.S. communities vulnerable to federal regulatory sanctions. If a plant isn't good enough to be built five miles inside the border in California, then it shouldn't be good enough to operate five miles outside the border in Mexico.

I realize this is a first step and that more work must be done to create cross border air quality zones. I look forward to working with the appropriate U.S. agencies and the Mexican government to implement such binational agreements. In the meantime, this legislation is immediately necessary for the protection of our border communities and I urge all my colleagues to join me in this effort to ensure the clean air throughout the region.

SERVICE AND SACRIFICE: AN ENDURING LEGACY

HON. ROBERT E. ANDREWS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share the poignant words of Major Joal Wolf (USAR) delivered as part of a speech on Memorial Day, May 27, 2002.

Our nation has changed significantly since last September. Indeed, the world has changed since then.

Even our Memorial Day celebrations have acquired a deeper meaning. As a nation, we have now spent many months solemnly recollecting the lives of more than 3,000 American service members and civilians who died last summer during the worst terrorist attacks on U.S. soil. Now more than ever, we recognize what it means to honor the lives of those who die in service to our great nation.

Today we honor all those who died defending America—those who were active duty and those who served in our reserve components; those who were short-term volunteers, those who were drafted and those who made the military a career. We honor the veterans of every service: Army, Air Force, Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard.

On this day last year, our thoughts were focused on sacrifices made during previous wars. We were mindful, as well, of the daily peril of troops stationed around the world, and of those training here at home to keep us safe.

Today our concerns are more immediate than reflective. Instead of focusing solely on past sacrifices, we must also face the reality of ongoing losses from our eight-month war on terrorism.

It seems appropriate that today we should single out the casualties of our war against terrorism. Regrettably, the deaths of September 11 have been followed by the deaths of soldiers sent abroad to prevent other such disasters. As our commander in chief explained in plain terms at the very beginning of this war, our primary defense is to take the fight right to the doorsteps of those who spread terror.

After almost a month of nonmilitary response to the attacks, U.S. military forces responded with measured force. While executed with great care and precision, we feared it was only a matter of time before America suffered more casualties.

As in previous wars, our losses came in a variety of ways. Military personnel died in accidents and they were lost to hostile and friendly fire. This first war of the 21st century is being fought differently than our previous wars. Our first casualty by enemy fire was not a soldier or airman, but a CIA agent. The first soldier to fall to hostile fire—a full three months after our introduction of military forces into the region—was Sergeant Nathan Chapman of San Antonio, Texas.

The recent public display of support is welcomed and not lost on those of us who served in Vietnam. Ultimately, it is the confidence of the American people—the public will to sustain the fight—that serves as the foundation for victory in any war, including the war on terror.

The war on terrorism is a different war from any other our nation has ever faced, a war on many fronts against terrorists who operate in more than 60 different countries. And this is war that must be fought not only overseas, but also here at home.

This war is more personal than our previous wars. Here we have an enemy not representing an entire nation, but representing evil. Instead of trying to occupy land mass or displace our military forces, the enemy wishes to destroy the very existence of America, and of other civilized nations, cultures and religions. American families must brace for continued casualties in this difficult, but inspiring, campaign.

We've been awakened as a nation to the reality that the world remains a very dangerous place. To ensure peace and prosperity, we have to have the best trained and the best equipped armed forces on the face of the earth. That is a role that our country has to assume during this period. We're blessed with extraordinary men and women who risk their lives each day so that each of us can live in peace and freedom. And we ought not to forget where our forces are spread far and wide across the globe—in Korea and in Japan and in Bosnia and Kosovo and in the Sinai, just to name a few places.

These are times that test us as citizens and define our nation. We are beginning to see the possibilities of a world beyond the war on terror. We have a chance, if we take it, to write a hopeful chapter in human history. All at once, a new threat to civilization is erasing old lines of rivalry and resentment between nations.

The face of battle is changing with this new war, and America's military has already demonstrated it is prepared to meet this challenge. From precision air strikes to special operations troops riding horseback in the mountains of Afghanistan, we've seen our military's flexibility and commitment to its mission.

I'd like to mention a book that came out recently, one that I think bears mentioning today. It's called War Letters Extraordinary Correspondence from American Wars. This volume contains hundreds of letters by American military personnel from the Civil War up through the Persian Gulf War, Somalia and Bosnia. It's part of something called the Legacy Project, a nonprofit effort to preserve wartime letters.

Many of these letters mailed home from the front to loved ones were the last letters ever sent by these troops. That makes for emotional reading. But for those who have never experienced the total terror and uncertainty of combat, these letters are a chilling lesson in what's at stake when we send our forces off to battle—precious lives, connected to loved ones at home, in peril.

One of the more interesting similarities in the letters, regardless of the time period, is the attempt of letter writers to reassure loved ones back home of their safety. It says something of the spirit of these men and women when their courage and optimism shine through like that.

These letters are full of concern for younger siblings and other relatives. They are full of desire to help boost home-front morale. And, as you can imagine, letters to parents and sweethearts alike conclude with very open expressions of love.

The book's editor Andrew Carroll of Washington, DC, describes in his introduction how these individual letters spanning 140 years create a very personal narrative. "It is the story of immeasurable suffering and astonishing violence," he explains. "But it is also a story that encompasses tales of heroism, perseverance, integrity, honor, and reconciliation."

He describes how these letters were written from a variety of circumstances: filthy trenches, flooded foxholes, the sweltering islands of the Pacific, muddy battlefields of Europe, the frozen mountains of Korea, the jungles of Vietnam and other places far from home.

I would like to close by mentioning that these one million men and women made the ultimate sacrifice at the request of their nation. Their legacy will continue to live in our memory, and we honor them as we will honor those who will come after them.

It is our task—the task of this generation—to provide the response to aggression and terror. We have no other choice, because there is no other peace.

The contributions of our soldiers given willingly and without hesitation, demonstrate their profound and abiding devotion to this nation. On our behalf, they take risks, they go into harm's way, they shed blood—prepared to give their lives if necessary—and some have paid to preserve peace and freedom and our way of life, They continue to make incredible contributions and even more incredible sacrifices. We must never forget the service and sacrifice—enduring legacy—of these brave souls who gave their full measure for all of us.

Thank you for sharing your time today in honor of these special Americans—those who paid the ultimate price in demonstrating that freedom is not free. God bless you and God bless America."

HONORING COAST GUARD HEROES FROM WORLD WAR II

HON. FRANK A. LoBIONDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with the Coast Guard personnel at Group-Air Station Atlantic City as they honor two World War II veterans. The two former Coast Guard aircrew from New Jersey flew many homeland security missions together from bases in Florida between 1943 and 1945, protecting convoys moving along the East Coast and searching for German U-boats.

Donald T. Daughenbaugh was born in Atlantic City, NJ in 1920. Harry D. Mount was born in Riverside, NJ in 1922. Donald Daughenbaugh joined the Coast Guard in 1941, became a boat coxswain in 1942 and was designated an Aviation Pilot #71 on April 16, 1943. He began operational flying shortly afterward at Air Station Miami. Harry Mount left college early to join the Coast Guard in the summer of 1942. He was sent to Radio School in Atlantic City, NJ and then reported to Air Station Miami as an Aviation Radio operator.

Together these two Coast Guard heroes flew the OS2U–3 KINGFISHER, a scout observation plane, searching for German submarines and protecting the convoys along the East Coast. This plane carried two depth charges and a 30 caliber machine gun. They also flew missions in the PBY, PBM, PH2, JRF and J4F protecting convoys and doing Air-Sea Rescues from many airfields along the Florida coast.

True to form, these two proud veterans, and Coast Guard legends, are not going to just stand by to receive praise from today's Coast Guard aviators. They are going to honor the newest Coast Guard aircrewmen by pinning them with their newly earned aircrew wings.

Let the record show that Donald T. Daughenbaugh, Enlisted Pilot #71 and later Commissioned Coast Guard Aviator #216, at 82 years of age, is still flying 60 years later and flew his own airplane to Coast Guard Group-Air Station Atlantic City. This act makes proud all that have worn the "Wings of Gold" throughout the long history of Coast Guard aviation.

These two great men and their wonderful families should be very proud. May God bless them richly as they continue to give to their country and to their wonderful service, the United States Coast Guard.

MICROENTERPRISE ENHANCEMENT ACT

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this important legislation.

Microenterprise is an effective and proven means of U.S. foreign aid that has successfully offered nearly 20 million of the world's poorest people the hope of economic independence and self-reliance.

Loans, often averaging less than $150, allow people to start and expand very small businesses without depending on money-lenders who demand exorbitant interest rates.

Access to the tools and credit needed to succeed allows poor people to reap the benefits of their skills and hard work.

Extra money earned is used to obtain better food, housing and education.

High repayment rates for microenterprise lending programs allow capital to be recycled into new loans; interest income allows programs to eventually cover their costs.

This bipartisan legislation provides a substantial but responsible incremental increase in funding for microenterprise programs from its current level of $155 million to $175 million in fiscal year 2003 and $200 million in fiscal year 2004.

The bill also educates Peace Corps volunteers about the benefits of microenterprise programs and urges them to utilize this as a resource in their sites.

This important legislation will impact the lives of many families while empowering the world's most impoverished.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bipartisan bill.

TRAFICANT TRIAL: A RAILROAD OF JUSTICE

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the government presented a ten-count indictment against me on May 4, 2001. And convicted me on those ten counts, Thursday, April 11, 2002.

Count One—Anthony Bucci. Anthony Bucci testified that he "owned" me by performing $12,000 of work at the Traficant farm (which is not and was not owned by me). Facts in this count are simple and right to the point. . . . Anthony Bucci perjured himself and the government suborned his perjury

The most appalling underlying issue behind Anthony Bucci's testimony is that it was given as part of Mr. Bucci's third federal plea agreement and currently the government is working on another deal with Mr. Bucci that would allow Anthony's brother Robert to return to the United States, after having fled the country to escape federal charges.

Anthony Bucci's contention is that he and his company provided $12,000 in materials and services and that these acts let him "own a Congressman" was refuted and impeached by five defense witnesses.

First, the majority of the work performed at the Traficant farm was done by Mr. Greg Tyson, who was scheduled as the government's witness to testify under immunity, but was never called by them. Subsequently, I called him to the stand.

Under oath, Mr. Tyson testified that not only was he accused and threatened with an indictment by the government for performing services at the farm as a favor to me, he also testified that he was PAID for his services.

Mr. Tyson was a partner with Anthony Bucci and Joe Sattarelle in a concrete company and I did arrange for the first ever minority loan to be made to Mr. Tyson to finance this investment; Mr. Tyson being a black man and not a 'front-man' for minority access to contracts.

Mr. Sattarelle, who was a government witness, testified that Anthony Bucci was such a liar that if Anthony Bucci said his name was Anthony Bucci, he (Sattarelle) would not believe it and that Anthony (Bucci) would lie about anything to avoid problems.

Mr. Sattarelle further testified that "Yes, Jim Traficant helped [their] company, he helped everybody."

Even an employee from ODOT testified that I did help the Bucci's as I helped any and all local companies. During this testimony the ODOT official stated that I received more federal money for my district than any other congressional district in the state of Ohio.

The truth is that the work Anthony Bucci offered to do at the farm ended up creating significant damage to the property, including causing the main bank barn to almost collapse, and costing my father, James A. Traficant, Sr. a tremendous amount of money to make repairs.

With regard to Bucci's alleged work at the farm, Sandy Ferrante testified that the main bearing stone wall of the barn had caved in and the barn was near collapse and that Anthony Bucci feared a lawsuit over this incident.

Another witness and contractor, Harry Mangañaro, testified that he "helped Jim Traficant jack up the corner of the barn because the barn was literally going to collapse" because of the destruction to the property by Anthony Bucci.

Perhaps the most damaging testimony in this count came from Susan Bucci, Anthony's sister-in-law and widow of Anthony's brother, Dan.

Dan and Susan owned a farm across the street from the Traficant farm. Susan Bucci testified that I didn't like Anthony and never did and that my friend in the Bucci family was

Dan. She further testified that Dan and I would go riding cycles together and shared bedding and equipment for livestock on a neighborly basis and that "Jim Traficant performed farm services at no cost to our family that far exceeded any of the so-called work that the Bucci brothers offered to do. And, that if anyone was owed money for materials and services, Jim Traficant was owed money by the (Bucci) brothers."

Additionally, Susan Bucci also stated under oath that Anthony (Bucci) was a "liar" and lied to her and took advantage of her and her family when her husband (Dan) died by "taking money" that was due to her and her children when the Bucci company was dissolved.

Susan Bucci's affidavit supports her assertions and reads in pertinent part:

AFFIDAVIT BY SUSAN BUCCI, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2002

I hereby swear that the following statement is the truth:

1. Jim Traficant brush hogged 40 acres of land at our farm on Route 165 in Green Township, Mahoning County, Ohio, for seven years.

2. Jim Traficant mowed, raked and bailed hay for us on 25 acres for four years, with his own equipment and provided his own fuel.

3. Jim Traficant, at his expense, repaired our hay wagons regularly.

4. My husband, Dan (deceased) told me that when we stopped farming, to "give Jim the hay wagons."

5. Jim Traficant would not take any hay wagons without paying.

6. Jim Traficant gave me a check for one thousand dollars.

7. Jim Traficant said, "$400 for the wagons and $600 for anything I may owe."

8. Jim Traficant did not have to do that, but I believe he did that to help me, because I was having a difficult time financially.

9. The family had asked Jim Traficant to help get Tony Bucci into a halfway house.

10. Jim Traficant did that, and it was common knowledge that he would help anybody.

11. Jim Traficant would not accept anything, even though the brothers wanted to pay him.

12. On occasion, they got Jim some sawdust that my husband also used; my husband would take old hay and straw to bed our cows.

13. There was a time when Jim asked for help to borrow jackhammers to break up concrete in big, old bank barn.

In closing, I believe that Jim Traficant was owed money by the family.

Sworn before a notary on February 1, 2002.

Aside from the contracts my office assisted with, there were letters written on behalf of Anthony Bucci when he was a resident at a halfway house, Community Corrections Association (CCA). It is evident, through the testimony of Dominic Paolone, Jr. that these letters were not done as a favor to Anthony but as a standard procedure by my office when a family member contacts one of my district offices.

Mr. Paolone stated that he was a resident of CCA while Anthony Bucci was there and admitted that Mr. Bucci was upset because I wouldn't help him unless he followed office policy, which meant a family member must make the request on behalf of the individual incarcerated. Eventually Anthony's brother contacted me to submit a letter to CCA on Anthony's behalf. And, according to his testimony, Mr. Paolone was provided with the same assistance when his (Paolone's) father contacted my office.

Obviously, the jury was misled by Anthony Bucci's uncorroborated testimony and overlooked five truthful witnesses simply because the government submitted circumstantial evidence in the form of advocacy letters from my office to help the Bucci brothers and their respective companies. These letters were not in return for favors but because these companies employed up to 100 of my constituents and when these companies received local contracts, subcontracting and spin-off employment affected over 200 families in my district.

Did I help the Buccis—Yes. I helped hundreds of companies in my district, which had a 22 percent unemployment rate when I took office. Any member of Congress would have done the same thing.

As of Tuesday, June 4, 2002, Anthony Bucci, who would have faced 21 months in prison for defrauding Uncle Sam, instead got a slap on the wrist in the form of 6 weeks home detention and two years of probation for his participation in my trial.

At this point, it's obvious what kind of deals the government is willing to make to get their #1 target—Jim Traficant, the only one to ever defeat the government, pro se, in a RICO trial.

For the record, the purported services occurred in the early 1990's, thus the imposition of a RICO charge was used by the government to extend the statute of limitations to accommodate for these ludicrous allegations.

The government provided no physical evidence, no wiretaps, no tapes, no hidden microphones and no fingerprints on more than 1,000 documents. How is it possible to reach a conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt with only circumstantial evidence and the testimony of felons? In a RICO case, no less.

Shove count one up their asphalt. Tomorrow, railroad stop two. . . . I mean count two. Sugar coated extortion, prosecutorial misconduct, subordination of perjury and other related governmental atrocities.

RON GNATKOWSKI: LAYING A STRONG FOUNDATION FOR STUDENTS

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Ron Gnatkowski as he prepares to retire after 29 years as a public school teacher with Saginaw Township Community Schools. Ron deserves our highest praise and gratitude for his devotion to teaching and for consistently displaying the patience and understanding children need to blossom in and out of the classroom.

The sixth of seven children, Ron grew up in Saginaw, Michigan. After serving in the U.S. Army, Ron earned his bachelor's degree from Saginaw Valley State University in 1972. He later earned a master's degree from Central Michigan University and another master's degree from Saginaw Valley State University. He has worked for Saginaw Township Community Schools since 1973.

As a kindergarten and first-grade teacher at Plainfield Elementary School for the past 19 years, Ron has been a top-notch role model for students, parents and colleagues. Historically, few men have accepted the challenges of teaching kindergarten and first-grade, but Ron never let such perceived barriers hold him back. As a result, his passion for teaching those early elementary years and his great success in doing so has inspired other male teachers to follow his path.

However, Ron's gender was not the only thing that set him apart. Throughout his tenure, Ron has always led by example. His work ethic and innovative ideas for teaching young boys and girls set a high standard at his school and throughout the district. In addition, Ron's unparalleled classroom skills and his commitment to children have made him a perfect mentor to younger colleagues and a valuable resource for others working to become better educators.

It also is noteworthy that Ron extended his expertise to improve schools beyond his professional responsibilities by serving on the Carrollton Public Schools Board of Education since 1988. As a board member, he has been a strong advocate for educators, students and taxpayers. He also has been active with the Association for the Education of Young Children, having served on the State Board of Directors of that organization for four years and on the local board for the past 14 years.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to Ron Gnatkowski for all that he has done for our schools in Saginaw County and throughout the state. I am confident that he will continue to lend his voice to improve education and I wish him a well-earned and enjoyable retirement.

SENATE—Friday, June 7, 2002

The Senate met at 11 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, we are irresistibly drawn into Your presence by the magnitude of Your love. You place a homing spirit within us and call us home to Your heart. Thank You for the strength, security, and serenity that You provide in the midst of the strain and stress of public service. In Your presence we experience perfect peace for the pressure of conflict, the tyranny of the urgent, and late night legislation.

It is when we return to You that we find each other. You help us discover unity and diversity and oneness in spite of differences. We feel the bond of loyalty of a shared patriotism. Remind us that all power is derived through You and authority is divinely delegated for the fulfillment of Your purposes. May we never forget that You are in control and our task is to seek and do Your will. Bless this Senate as Senators and staff confess again that You are absolute Lord of all, the One to whom we are accountable and, ultimately, the only One we must please. You are sovereign. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JACK REED led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Mr. REED thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, earlier this morning we completed a very difficult supplemental appropriations bill, which of course will now go to conference with the House. It was a long day yesterday and part of today to complete that, but it was a good week's work we were able to accomplish.

There will be no rollcall votes today. The next rollcall vote will occur Monday evening at approximately 5:30 p.m.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—H.R. 4800 AND H.R. 4823

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand the following bills are at the desk and have been read for the first time, H.R. 4800 and H.R. 4823.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order, en bloc, for these bills to receive a second reading, and I then object to any further consideration of this legislation at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it so ordered.

The clerk will report the bills by title for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H.R. 4800) to repeal the sunset of the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 with respect to the expansion of the adoption credit and adoption assistance programs.
> A bill (H.R. 4823) to repeal the sunset of the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 with respect to the exclusion from Federal income tax for restitution received by victims of the Nazi Regime.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been heard, the bills will be placed on the calendar.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 625, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> A bill (S. 625) to provide Federal assistance to States and local jurisdictions to prosecute hate crimes, and for other purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, with the legislation now before us, I am very happy to see the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the Chamber today to lead the discussion on this legislation. This is an extremely important piece of legislation. We have waited a long time to get to its consideration.

I have been somewhat disappointed when I read already in this week's newspapers that the minority has indicated they have scores of nonrelevant, nongermane amendments they are going to file on this piece of legislation. This is code word for they are going to do everything they can to stop the legislation from passing.

That is unfortunate because this legislation, which is commonly referred to as the hate crimes bill, has that name because that is what it is about. It is about people with hatred doing criminal acts.

Senate consideration of this legislation is much needed and is long overdue. It demonstrates, once again, the change that has taken place in this body since Senator LEAHY began the chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee.

But for his advocacy, we would not be in this spot; we would not be where we are now.

The chairman of the committee is here, and he has heard me say this on many occasions. We have done such a good job in the Judiciary Committee. I say "we" because the committee doing well reflects on all of us. When I think of what we have gone through in this committee, we had the terrorist acts of September 11, which caused us to focus immediately on antiterrorism legislation, which we passed. People complained because we didn't move that legislation fast enough. Now people are writing that it was one of the best things that happened in this Congress in a long time because the Judiciary Committee slowed us down. We didn't run pell-mell into this legislation but walked deliberately into it. As a result, we have good legislation, not the least of which has a sunset provision in it. If we went too far in any way, it sunsetted.

The work that has been done by the Judiciary Committee has been excellent. Not only do we have the situation with the terrorist acts of September 11 and all the work of the committee as it related thereto, but we had an anthrax attack in Senator DASCHLE's office. Senator LEAHY received anthrax-laden materials. From whom, we do not know. It was enough that it closed down one of the office buildings where 50 Senators have their offices. That slowed us down.

In spite of that and many other obstacles we have had to overcome, we have moved forward on judges. I don't know the exact number now, but I believe it is 57 confirmed judges. I believe there is half a dozen or so on the calendar, a tremendous amount of work. We are doing the very best we can in that regard.

This hate crimes legislation is another example of the work the Judiciary Committee has done and the Senate has done generally since Senator JEFFORDS joined our caucus.

The present Federal criminal statutes do not respond to hate crimes motivated by a person's gender, sexual orientation, or disability. In fact, one of these characteristics, sexual orientation, is the third leading motivation behind hate crimes. Everyone has heard of some of the most egregious cases of hate crimes: Matthew Shepard, a very frail young man, was a gay student at the University of Wyoming. He was severely beaten, left for dead hanging on a fence post. There is no question this happened because he was gay.

James Byrd, Jr., an African American man, was brutally murdered, hooked up behind a pickup truck and dragged to his death.

These tragedies are not isolated. I indicated on this Senate floor earlier this week some of the incidents that have happened in Nevada because of hatred.

In Carson City, our State capital, somebody set a black family's home on fire and wrote the words "white power" and other racial slurs at the scene of the crime.

Vandals spray-painted a swastika and other graffiti on religious statues at a Roman Catholic Church in Henderson, NV, where I went to high school.

A black family in Las Vegas found a cross burning on their lawn.

Two white men attacked two Muslims with a baseball bat. They beat the Muslims with a baseball bat outside a mosque where they had gone to worship.

Condemning these acts is one thing, but we must legislate against these acts, and that is what this legislation is all about. These types of crimes not only infringe on victims' rights, they erode people's sense of security and self-worth.

Our country was founded on the principle of liberty and justice for all, and that means all. When perpetrators of hate crime target anyone, they really are targeting all of us and the principles that make our diverse Nation what it is.

We must move forward and continue our program of diversity in this country. This legislation will help us do that.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I compliment the assistant majority leader. Seeing Senator REID on the floor—along with Senator REED of Rhode Island and Senator AKAKA it seems only minutes ago I saw all of them as we were finishing up at 1 o'clock this morning. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Hawaii in letting me speak at this point.

The distinguished senior Senator from Nevada did an enormous job in getting the emergency supplemental appropriations bill passed last night. I have told the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada many times that he has patience this Irish-Italian American probably never could have. But it was his patience, his persistence, and also the great credibility he has on both sides of the aisle, and the great respect of Senators in both parties, that made it possible for him to get that bill passed. Had he not carefully worked with Senator BYRD, Senator STEVENS, and all the others to get that through, we would still be on the floor and we would not be anywhere near passage. I compliment my friend from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a couple housekeeping matters? I will finish quickly. I say to my friend, I have never ever corrected my friend on the floor, but I will this morning. We did not finish that last night. We finished it this morning.

AMENDMENT NO. 3807

(Purpose: To provide reliable officers, technology, education, community prosecutors, and training in our neighborhoods)

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator BIDEN.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. BIDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 3807.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

> We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on Calendar No. 103, S. 625, a bill to provide Federal assistance to states and local jurisdictions to prosecute hate crimes:
> Hillary Clinton, Harry Reid, Jack Reed, Russell Feingold, Richard Durbin, Edward Kennedy, Evan Bayh, Charles Schumer, Debbie Stabenow, Maria Cantwell, Daniel Akaka, Ron Wyden, Carl Levin, Daniel Inouye, Joseph Lieberman, E. Benjamin Nelson, Byron Dorgan, Patrick Leahy.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in the Washington Times there is a report today that says:

A senior Republican leadership aide said there are 40 to 50 Republican ideas under consideration as possible amendments To this legislation—> ranging from an alternative hate-crimes bill to tax policy, national security and social issues. Republicans also are considering making permanent tax credits for teachers and relief from the "marriage penalty" in the tax code.

> "You might even see an amendment that's a complete substitute to the defense authorization bill."

I am not going to belabor the point other than to say those are, I repeat, code words to kill this bill, and we are going to do everything we can on this side of the aisle to make sure that hate crimes in America are prosecuted and the people against whom there is hatred are not persecuted.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I agree with the senior Senator from Nevada. Everybody is going to say they are against hate crimes. Nobody is going to say they are for hate crimes. But if we are against them, then let's pass laws that give our law enforcement officers the teeth to go after hate crimes. Let's not go through the fiction of trying to amend this bill to death so nothing comes forward. We cannot let everyone say they are against hate crimes while some do their best to kill the hate crimes legislation.

Violent crimes motivated by prejudice and hate are tragedies that demand our attention. These crimes mar our history, from the lynchings that haunted our race relations for more than a century to the recent well-publicized slayings of Matthew Shepard and James Byrd, Jr.

Since September 11, we have seen a disturbing increase in crimes committed against Arabs, Muslims, and those of South Asian descent. In other words, hate has been a persistent threat to the public safety, especially the safety of minority group members.

I am not naive enough to think we can outlaw hate, but we can make outlaws of those who commit hate crimes. We can do a lot more to protect Americans from these crimes, and to ensure equal rights for all our citizens.

The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act will do just that. It will provide a measure of protection for those who fear the violent consequences of prejudice. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation. I am also proud that it is one of the first bills I moved through the Judiciary Committee after I became chairman. I had the opportunity as a new chairman to set priorities by deciding what would be on the agenda. I made sure this was one of the first bills the Committee considered.

I am grateful to Senators KENNEDY, SPECTER, and SMITH for their bipartisan leadership on this issue. Unfortunately, the bipartisanship surrounding this bill is not universal, as the distinguished Senator from Nevada has already pointed out. Republicans objected before the Memorial Day recess to a unanimous consent request that would have allowed this bill to come to the full Senate for debate. I wish they had allowed it to do that. It could have been passed by now.

I am glad we can now begin debate. I am honored to open the debate. Senator KENNEDY is with his family today following a long-time family commitment, but he will join us on Monday to debate this important bill.

The hate crimes legislation we consider today strengthens current law by making it easier for Federal authorities to investigate and prosecute crimes based on race, color, religion, and national origin. Victims will no longer have to be engaged in a narrow range of activities, such as serving as a juror, to be protected under Federal law. In other words, if a criminal commits a hate crime against a juror, he or she can be prosecuted under Federal law. But if a criminal commits the same hate crime against the same victim, while the victim is conducting private business, that criminal is immune from prosecution under Federal hate crimes law.

This bill also focuses the attention and resources of the Federal Government on the problem of hate crimes committed against people because of their sexual orientation, or their gender, or their disability. That is an important step.

Now, opponents of this legislation like to say that "all crimes are hate crimes." But everyone in this Chamber agrees that some crimes are more serious—and more deserving of Federal attention—than others. We have repeatedly increased the Federal role in fighting crime over the last decades, from the hijacking of airplanes to carjacking to drug crimes. So the question we face today is whether crimes motivated by prejudice deserve greater Federal attention than the limited amount they receive today. I believe they do, and I know 50 other U.S. Senators from both parties who have sponsored this bill agree with me.

The crimes we are talking about today are particularly pernicious crimes that affect more than just the victims and their families—they inspire fear in those who have no connection to the victim beyond a shared characteristic, such as race or disability or sexual orientation.

Mr. President, when James Byrd, Jr., was dragged behind a pickup truck—dragged—one can only imagine the terror and horror he felt in the face of his violent death. He was killed by bigots in Texas in 1998. Why? For the sole reason that he was black. Think how many African Americans throughout our Nation felt diminished as citizens to know that another African American was horribly, brutally killed simply because of the color of his skin.

When Matthew Shepard was murdered in Wyoming, he was left hanging on a fence. Why? Because he was gay. Don't you think gays and lesbians in the United States felt less safe on the streets and in their homes? These crimes promote fear and insecurity that are distinct from the reactions to other crimes. They produce a national reaction. We need to take action to enhance their prosecution.

These terrible crimes have also affected my little State of Vermont. In 1996, Julianne Williams and Lollie Winans were murdered in the Shenandoah National Park in Virginia. Ms. Williams lived in Burlington, VT. She and Ms. Winans were planning to move to Huntington, VT, after their hiking trip to Virginia. (Huntington, VT, I must say, is a beautiful little town, one of the most peaceful places you can imagine.) They were murdered.

In April, the Justice Department indicted Darrell Davis Rice for murder. The prosecutors invoked the Hate Crimes Sentencing Enhancement Act, charging that Mr. Rice killed the two women as part of his plan to "assault, intimidate, injure, and kill women because of their gender." Prosecutors said that Rice had stated that he "hates gays." He said he had taken it upon himself to determine that Ms. Williams and Ms. Winans "deserved to die because they were lesbians." What a horrible commentary. This man decided in his mind they deserved to die, so he was going to kill them.

Now, Rice was susceptible to Federal hate crime laws because the murders occurred on Federal land. If he had been indicted for killing these women in Huntington, VT, he would not have been susceptible to this enhancement. So his indictment fell within a narrow window. With passage of this act, we can provide Federal protection to women, gays and lesbians throughout our Nation.

All Americans have the right to live, travel, and gather where they choose. In the past, we have responded as a Nation to deter and to punish violent denials of civil rights. We have enacted Federal laws to protect the civil rights of all of our citizens for nearly 150 years. This law continues that great and honorable tradition.

This bill will strengthen Federal jurisdiction over hate crimes as a backup, but not a substitute, for State and local law enforcement. States will still bear the responsibility for prosecuting most hate crimes. That is important to me as a former State prosecutor.

I have a great deal of respect for the law enforcement officers in my State, such as David Demag, the Police Chief in Essex, VT, who is now serving on the Medal of Valor Review Board. I want the States to have primary jurisdiction, because they can handle most hate crimes prosecutions. But there are times when Federal assistance is helpful and even necessary. For those cases, we must have this Federal law.

In a sign that this legislation respects the proper balance between Federal and local authority, it has received strong bipartisan support from State and local law enforcement organizations across the country. This support convinces me that we should pass this powerful law enforcement tool without further delay.

Moreover, this bill accomplishes a critically important goal—protecting all of our citizens—without compromising our constitutional responsibilities. It is a tool for combating acts and threats of violence motivated by hatred and bigotry. It doesn't target pure speech—even that speech that you and I and everybody finds offensive or disagreeable. The Constitution does not permit us in Congress to prohibit the expression of an idea simply because we disagree with it.

As Justice Holmes wrote, the Constitution protects not just freedom for the thought and expression we agree with, but freedom for the thought that we hate. I am devoted to that principle, and I am confident that this bill does not contradict it. Indeed, Senator KENNEDY, who has been a leader on civil rights for four decades, has worked carefully and hard to tailor this needed remedy to the narrowing restrictions of the current very activist Supreme Court.

It is long past time to pass this bill. Of course, the Senate has done its part before. In 1999, we passed it as part of the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill, but the House insisted on its removal. In 2000, the Senate voted 57 to 42 to include it as an amendment to the Department of Defense authorization bill. That year, the House even voted 232 to 192 to instruct House conferees on the bill to agree to the Senate language on hate crimes.

Nonetheless, the House Republican leadership insisted on its removal and they won. So despite the best efforts of former President Clinton and us all, we were twice unable to overcome the opposition of the other body. I hope we will this time.

I hope the House Republicans will finally allow a vote on this measure. I urge President Bush to ask them to do so. Think about what the President said so eloquently last week at West Point. I think of this because the distinguished Presiding Officer is a well-respected graduate of West Point.

When the President spoke at West Point's commencement about our fight against terrorism, he called it a conflict between good and evil and said that we cannot allow other nations to "tolerate the hatred that leads to terror." He correctly stated that "there can be no neutrality between justice and cruelty." He promised that "the United States will promote moderation and tolerance and human rights."

I agree with President Bush. And I believe that passage of this legislation will show once again that America values tolerance and protects all of its people. I urge the opponents of this legislation to consider the message it sends to the rest of America when, year after year, we are unable to move this broadly supported bill.

A majority of the people in the Senate support this bill, a majority of the people in the House of Representatives support it, and a majority of Americans support it. Yet a small group blocks it from going forward. What does that say about our American values?

I say to the Republican leadership in the other body and in our own: Listen to what President Bush has so eloquently said at West Point. Let's pass this legislation. The victims of hate deserve our support—the victims do. Those who would impose hateful conduct upon them deserve to know that the United States of America doesn't stand for that. So we need a vote, both in this body and in the House of Representatives. If we have such a vote, Mr. President, we will once again make it very clear: The U.S. Government does not tolerate hate and intolerance, no matter who it is directed against. Making that statement, we make our Nation even stronger.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Hawaii yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. AKAKA. Yes, I certainly yield to my friend from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the presentation by the Senator from Hawaii, I be recognized for 20 minutes as in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Hawaii.

THE BATTLE AGAINST INVASIVE SPECIES

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to call attention to a very serious problem that burdens not only the State of Hawaii, but also the entire country—the problem of exotic and invasive species. Invasive species are plants, animals, and microbes which are transported from their native environments, and in the absence of natural predators and competitors, proliferate and permanently alter their new "home." Invasive species are potentially one of the largest economic and environmental threats in this century, costing the U.S. an estimated $100 billion each year and wreaking havoc with the nation's biodiversity. With the rise of global commerce, invasive species have found it easier to find their way to new lands. They arrive in nearly every possible way, including by vessels in ballast water to our ports, and by planes via cargo, military and commercial shipments of plants and food. Upon arrival, they can have devastating impacts on water quality, agriculture, health, and especially the environment and the economy.

Nowhere is this situation more evident than in Hawaii. Hawaii has suffered the highest rate of species extinction in the United States, and in fact, one of the highest rates of extinction anywhere in the world. The Hawaii State Department of Land and Natural Resources estimates that before the arrival of humans, new species became established in Hawaii once every 70,000 years. Currently, Hawaii becomes home to over 20 new species per year. The Federal interagency Aquatic Nuisance Species Task Force estimates that Hawaii alone has 4,465 nonindigenous species. It is a problem of unbelievable magnitude.

I would like to bring your attention to a few species in particular. Many may have read the recent Washington Post article on the coqui. This small frog is less than two inches long and is beloved in its native home of Puerto Rico. But in Hawaii, we have no native frogs. In fact, we have no native reptiles or terrestrial amphibians, no native snakes, iguanas, toads, or even salamanders. In short, our ecosystems are not prepared to take on the coqui; there are no natural predators, such as snakes. Therefore, the impact of the coqui is immense. These nocturnal frogs, which make beautiful sounds individually, cause quite an uproar when singing in a chorus. Each one can produce a call at 90 decibels. However, at one site on the island of Hawaii, the coqui population is estimated at over 8,000 frogs an acre. It would sound as if 8,000 lawn mowers were running at once. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has documented 260 infested sites on the Big Island, 40 sites on Maui, 20 on Oahu, and two on Kauai. Our tourism industries, especially our hotels which are world-renowned for the promise of restful tranquility, are already feeling the impact.

The coqui consume an average of 46,000 prey items per night per acre. This puts tremendous predation pressure on Hawaii's native arthropods, and provides intense competition for Hawaii's native forest birds, many of which are insect-eating as well as threatened or endangered species. The frogs also serve as an additional food source for non-native rats and mongoose. Increased populations of rats and mongoose then prey on the already impacted forest birds, which intensifies the effects on native ecosystems and disrupts their delicate balance.

The brown tree snake is another example of an invasive species with tremendous potential for affecting Hawaii. This snake was introduced to Guam in World War II probably as a stowaway in ship cargo. It eats any animal smaller than itself, and is responsible for the extinction of twelve native bird species on Guam. Up to 13,000 snakes per square mile may occur in some forested areas of Guam. A brown tree snake can enter a home, and its venom is life threatening to infants. In fact, one out of every thousand visits to the emergency room in Guam is due to snakebites. It has caused more than 1,200 electric power outages since 1980, some island-wide and lasting several days. Approximately every third day there is a snake-caused power outage somewhere on Guam. The outages cost Guam an estimated $1 to $4 million each year. Research and control of brown tree snakes in Guam cost over $4 million per year.

Now the brown tree snake is poised to invade Hawaii, other Pacific Islands, and even the U.S. mainland. The snake has already reached Hawaii several times as a stowaway on flights from Guam. If the brown tree snake is accidentally introduced, Hawaii will suffer the same fate as Guam. On Guam, you no longer hear the sweet melody of a songbird because they have all been consumed by the brown tree snake. Development of long-term screening measures at airports to prevent this introduction would cost an estimated $2.5 million annually over several years. While this may seem costly, the potential economic impact caused by the brown tree snake would be devastating in comparison.

Miconia is a large, leafy tree that was introduced to Hawaii in 1959. It was brought intentionally as an ornamental plant; miconia has a beautiful, deep rich purple color on the underside of its leaves. However, despite its benign appearance, it is an aggressive invader of native and disturbed forests, growing into dense stands that block light to smaller native plants. Miconia has also contributed to erosion and landslides because of its shallow root system. It blossoms four times a year, sending out millions of seeds each time, and the seed pods remain viable for up to eight years. Miconia is just one example of a noxious weed that is a major threat to native Hawaiian plants.

All across the country, invasive alien weeds fuel grass and forest fires, accelerate soil erosion, and consume critical water resources. The lost productivity of rangelands due to weeds has been estimated at $3.6 to $4.5 billion annually. Over 100 million acres of land are infested with weeds, and the infestation is expanding by 10 million acres per year. On Federal lands alone, the rate of infestation is 4,600 acres per day. Noxious weeds destroy or alter natural habitats, damage waterways and power lines, and depress property values. Some are even toxic.

In Hawaii, Federal, State, and local agencies have joined the universities and local communities to support efforts to prevent the spread of invasive species. The University of Hawaii, Hawaii's Department of Agriculture and State Department of Land and Natural Resources, the U.S. Geological Survey, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, as well as smaller, island-specific citizen groups coordinate efforts to research, track and control the coqui. In the case of the miconia, students and volunteers have to hack through a jungle to reach the trees, suffering through mosquito bites and the thorny underbrush. The State employs helicopters to spot plants in places that may have been missed, and volunteers in some cases drop off 100-foot cliffs to destroy these invaders.

Now it is time to do our part in Congress to support these efforts at the Federal level. I have joined 19 of my colleagues in signing a letter circulated by my friend, the senior Senator from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, in support of funding for the National Invasive Species Act of 1996. This Act provides for ballast water management to prevent the introduction and spread of non-indigenous species into the waters of the United States, provides for a comprehensive program to control the brown tree snake, and provides for invasive aquatic plant management.

In 1999, President Clinton signed Executive Order 13112. The executive order mandates federal agencies to take steps to prevent the introduction and spread of harmful alien species, and coordinate their actions with other federal agencies. The goal of the executive order is to minimize the negative economic, ecological, and human health impacts that invasive species cause.

We must act to turn these goals into reality. Funding for the battle against invasive species crosscuts almost every Federal agency, including the U.S. Department of the Interior, Department of Agriculture, Department of Defense, and Department of Commerce. Each agency has been taking an active role against invasive species. This is a challenge that must be appreciated and fought on all fronts, and the agencies need increased funding in this budget-conscious year. I urge my colleagues to support funding for the effective implementation of Executive Order 13112, the National Invasive Species Act of 1996, and for Federal and State agencies' efforts across the United States in the struggle against invasive and exotic species. Until these efforts are fully funded, we do not stand a chance against these destructive invaders.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CORPORATE GREED

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, in recent months I have been conducting hearings in the subcommittee that I chair and the Commerce Committee on the issue of the Enron scandal.

While conducting those hearings, I received a letter from a constituent of mine in North Dakota. That constituent said he had been an employee of the Enron Corporation for a good number of years and had $330,000 in his 401(k) retirement account, invested in Enron stock. And then, of course, Enron collapsed. Now that $330,000 is worth $1,700.

The folks at the top of Enron made a fortune and got away with their fortune, and the company collapsed, the employees lost their shirts, and the investors lost their shirts. It is another case of the big doing very well, and the little losing everything they had.

It reminds me of the verse in a song by Bob Wells and the Texas Playboys from the 1930s: Little guy picks the cotton, the big guy gets the money. The little bee sucks the blossom, the big bee gets the honey.

That is what is going on too often in this country. I am more and more dismayed by what I am reading in the business pages, about the scandals at the top levels of a number of corporations in America. I have been reading especially in recent days about Dennis Kozlowski, CEO of Tyco International. Mr. Kozlowski resigned under criminal indictment for tax evasion, but he has been criticized for some time for the way his company was playing games with his books.

Now, I don't know him. I have never met him. I did not know much about his company until it started making news. But Tyco's problems are another troubling sign about the state of our system of capitalism, the system by which companies accumulate money in a corporate structure, and the system by which people are compensated for their performance.

I will speak about this in a moment. But first let me mention another aspect that troubles me about Tyco's story. Because Tyco is one of those companies that, recently, decided to move its corporate headquarters off-shore, to avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

In the middle of a war against terrorism, it is unconscionable for an American corporation to forsake its country and move off-shore—in a so-called "inversion"—to avoid paying taxes. It really raises questions of patriotism, in my judgment. Who do they think should fight this war on terrorism? Who do they think ought to pay for the war against terrorism? Who do they think protects their assets and their company and their business? They want the protection of the U.S. military, but they do not want to pay for it.

Tyco is one of the world's largest manufacturers and services of electrical and electronic components, as well as undersea telecommunications systems, the largest manufacturer of fire protection, and electronic security services. Mr. Kozlowski resigned because, according to the allegations, he evaded more than $1 million in sales taxes on works of art that he acquired by Renoir, Monet, and others.

I am very interested in the information that has come to light after Mr. Kozlowski's resignation, criticism of the way he ran the company. He became CEO of Tyco in 1992. He was an accountant by training. In 1997, he moved Tyco headquarters from New Hampshire to Bermuda, as I mentioned. During the late 1990s, the company was in the eyes of many a very successful company.

Tyco grew at an amazing pace, and Mr. Kozlowski made a killing on the sale of company stock and stock options. In fact, over the past 4 years, this fellow made $325 million in compensation.

Then in 1999, the SEC started to investigate allegations that Tyco was engaged in "questionable" accounting practices. Mr. Kozlowski claimed to have done nothing wrong. He said publicly he was not about to sell off the stock in his company. According to filings with the SEC, however, he sold nearly $100 million of his stock as compensation in the year 2000 alone.

The Tyco stock started to drop rapidly. Tyco disclosed Mr. Kozlowski repaid $70 million in loans to Tyco—using company stock. Tyco shares lost $50 billion in January of this year. Last December, the value of this stock was $60; last night, $14.

So it is the little guys, the investors, the folks who put their money in Tyco stock who did not do very well. Mr. Kozlowski got $325 million in compensation over a 4-year period.

I have been reading about this day after day after day, and it reminded me of the movie, "Wall Street." That movie had an infamous character played by Michael Douglas, named Gordon Gekko. And that character delivered the often quoted words: "Greed is good. Greed is right. Greed works. And greed, mark my words, will save . . . that malfunctioning corporation called the USA."

That movie came out in 1987. By today's standards, Gordon Gekko seems like a Boy Scout.

The average compensation of the 10 highest paid chief executive officers in America, 20 years ago, was $3.5 million. That was their average compensation. Mr. President, $3.5 million a year was a pretty good compensation package then, and it would be a pretty good package today. But do you know what it is today? It is $150 million. The average compensation of the 10 most highly compensated CEOs in the country is $150 million a year.

Here is a list of some of the compensation paid to CEOs in the year 2000: $290 million, $225 million, $157 million. These are yearly compensation figures.

In the 1980s, when the movie "Wall Street" came out and Gordon Gekko was saying that greed was good, the average pay of a corporation head was about 42 times the pay of the average worker. Today, a CEO's pay is about 531 times greater than that of the average employee working for the corporation.

In one of my hearings on the Enron Corporation we found that Mr. Fastow, who was the CFO of the Enron Corporation, had a little partnership deal that he constructed. Even as an employee of the corporation—highly paid, I might add—he constructed partnerships, that were attached to the corporation, in which he had equity pieces and then got a commission to manage. He put $25,000 of his own money into one of these partnerships, and 60 days later took out $4.5 million.

I come from a really small town—300 people—with a very small school—9 in my senior class. But it does not take higher math to understand what cheating is all about. The hearings I have held on the Enron Corporation have described a culture of corruption and cheating and, in my judgment, criminal activities. The hearings I have conducted on Enron with respect to West Coast electricity pricing suggest to me rigging of electricity prices to the tune of billions, perhaps tens of billions, of dollars.

There is something rotten going on inside some of these corporations—not all of them, but some of them. And who stands to lose? The big guys make off with millions and millions of dollars—in most cases tens and hundreds of millions of dollars—and the little people lose their shirt.

If I might show some additional charts that describe this saga. The pay of American corporate executives is not even related to performance anymore. CEO pay was up 7 percent last year. Profits are down 35 percent. What kind of business do you see that in? The worse they do, the more they make? What kind of accountability exists with respect to the stockholders across this country, the moms and pops who have put their money in their retirement accounts in these companies, believing these people are doing a good job?

I mentioned Enron because I have spent a lot of time on that issue. In 1998 the president was Mr. Ken Lay, who claimed not to have the foggiest idea of what was going on inside his company. If ever there was an "Onward through the fog" voice from a CEO, it came from Mr. Lay. But he got $101 million in compensation for his services, through his sale of Enron stock.

Jeffrey Skilling testified before my subcommittee for about 6 hours. Nobody had the foggiest idea what he said. He apparently served in that corporation as one of its top executives. He heard nothing, saw nothing, participated in nothing, and decided he did not want to be a part of it anymore. It was the most byzantine hearing I ever held in my life. Here is a guy who claimed to be oblivious to fraud of the largest scale, and walked away from the company with $70 million in stock.

A couple of weeks ago the CEO of Adelphia, the sixth largest cable company in the country, resigned. We now discover, as a result of the 10–K financial statements that are filed with regulators, that Adelphia had $2.3 billion in debt, that was hidden off the balance sheet. Most of that was owed to companies that the CEO's family controlled, and that could not be paid back—$2.3 billion.

Almost all across this country now, workers in corporations—that is, the folks who make corporations function—are discovering that they no longer have defined benefit pension programs. That used to be the bulk of the pension programs. Now it is diminished to less than a fourth.

While the workers in a corporation are discovering the erosion of their pensions, the compensation at the top of these corporations is skyrocketing, in no relationship to how the corporation is doing.

This next chart also shows something interesting, and deeply troubling. The corporations in this country are paying a smaller and smaller percentage of the tax burden in our country. Payroll taxes—which hit the lowest wage earners in the country much harder than the top wage earners in the country—are growing as a portion of our tax burden. And these corporations, as I mentioned, are now increasingly looking to save taxes by renouncing their U.S. citizenship.

I know many corporations are responsible, and would never consider running off to Bermuda to avoid taxes. But some of them are doing so, and shame on them. Where is their sense of patriotism here? We are at war against terrorism, and we have corporations making a decision they don't want to be American anymore, they don't want to have an American identity, because to do so you have to pay taxes and pay a portion of the cost of the burden of government, which includes providing for the common defense and paying the wages and salaries of the men and women and the equipment in our armed services. Shame on people who think like that.

Franklin Roosevelt, in one of his fireside chats, said:

> Not all of us can have the privilege of fighting our enemies in distant parts of the world. Not all of us can have the privilege of working in a munitions factory or a shipyard, or on the farms or in the oil fields or mines, producing the weapons or raw materials that are needed by our Armed Forces. But there is one front and one battle where everyone in the United States—every man, woman and child is in action. . . . That front is right here at home, in our daily lives, and in our daily tasks. Here at home, everyone will have the privilege of making whatever self-denial is necessary, not only to supply our fighting men [and women], but to keep the economic structure of our country fortified and secure. . . .

When I read this and compare it to the stories about American companies moving their headquarters to a mailbox in Bermuda just to avoid paying taxes, I say shame on them.

I think we have to begin to think, here in the Congress: What do we do about the crisis in corporate governance in an increasing number of American firms? Where will it go?

When the average corporate executive in this country is now making 530 times the average compensation of workers in the corporation, isn't there something wrong here?

We have seen speculative bubbles recently, bubbles that are unhealthy in our economy. Is this not just another unhealthy bubble that is going to break at some point? Will the American people trust corporate governance when we have people at the top who are taking hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars out themselves and are not worried about the long-term financial solvency of the corporation, but worried only about what their compensation does relative to the stock value in the next quarter? Because their compensation is tied to short-term stock prices, they may have $50 million, $100 million, or $200 million at stake for them personally.

Will the American people trust corporate governance when we see corporate executives such as Mr. Lay, Mr. Skilling, Mr. Fastow, and others cashing out and putting millions and millions into their bank accounts even as they are telling employees, "Hold onto your stock. Tomorrow is going to be a better day. Our future is brighter.

Hang onto your stock, don't sell"—even as they are furiously selling off their shares privately in order to enrich themselves?

There are some legislative measures that we ought to consider, in my judgement. I will talk more about them later. Today, I wanted to raise some public questions about the state of corporate governance in our country, and the erosion in confidence in our economic system. And to say that we have some work to do on this issue.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAUCUS). The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I inquire as to the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is S. 625.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Are we in morning business now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Presiding Officer informs the Senator we are not in morning business. We are on the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. I thank the Chair and ask I be allowed such time as I may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I rise to speak today on the issue of the Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001. It is the hate crimes bill that we are now taking up. It is a bill I am pleased to coauthor with Senator KENNEDY from Massachusetts. It is a bill that is appropriately taken up now.

I know some of my colleagues, partisans on my side of the aisle, may say that we should not take up something like this at a time of war, a war on terrorism. But I searched my memory. Whenever America has been at war before, we have not abandoned domestic issues. Immediately following Pearl Harbor, we dealt with all kinds of things, from tax rates to civil rights, and the war proceeded. It is not inappropriate that in a time of war on terrorism we focus on domestic terrorism.

The President gave a great speech last night. He talked about how we can better create, for our Nation's protection, a more seamless way to provide for the common defense. I look forward to supporting him in that. But I say that hate crimes legislation is part and parcel of that same effort. It is a part of our war on terrorism. It is a part of the discharge of our responsibility to take care of our citizens.

I have always believed government's first duty is to provide security against violence to its citizens. We are doing that abroad, and we are doing it perhaps as never before at home. But I think it is very appropriate that for a day or 2 the Senate turn its attention to this law, which was created, in its initial form, more than 30 years ago.

Hate crimes legislation is not a new concept. Hate crimes legislation, as I understand its history, was created to give the Federal Government the ability to enforce civil rights, in Southern States in particular, where lynching laws were not enforced and where much violence was committed against our African American brothers and sisters.

It gave the Federal Government the right, the ability, to show up to work, to provide for the common defense. And that law, which covers race, religion, and national origin, is in effect. It has been fully vetted in the United States Supreme Court. It is constitutional. And it truly, as the Court has held, simply adds an element, as we do to all crimes, as to how you consider them, what penalties you apply, and what prosecution and vigor you employ.

It is entirely appropriate that we now add to this list of race, religion, and national origin, other identified minority groups in this country who, because of their status, are demonstrably more vulnerable to violence, to crime.

I have made, for more than a year, the practice of entering in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a tragic chronology, a catalog of hate crimes committed throughout our country.

On these charts I have in the Chamber—perhaps you cannot read them because of the small print—but each of them represents a day in which I have identified a hate crime that has been committed in our country. They are committed against African Americans. They are committed against the disabled. They are committed against women. And they are committed against gays and lesbians.

All of these crimes have one thing in common: they are committed against a minority community, and they have, at their heart, a malignant heart that hates. And that is the impelling force for committing violence against a minority person. And the crime is visited on a minority, on that American, because that is the common thread in all of this. They are committed against American citizens.

The common thread in this crime against Americans is that it is visited upon an individual, but it terrorizes an entire minority community. And we have said, since hate crimes were established back in the 1960s, there are just some things that are so heinous, so at odds with America's best values, that we are just going to say, as a matter of law, this is a new category of crime, and we are going to pursue it, and we are going to allow all branches of government, all levels of government—local, State, and now Federal—to participate in the pursuit and the prosecution of those who would commit these kinds of terrorist activities against a whole community. And that is what we are doing.

Today, I am going to add another one to this sad chronology. It occurred in Honolulu, HI, in May of last year—a year ago. Two teens were charged with attempted murder after allegedly dousing the tents of gay campers with flammable liquid while those campers were inside, setting one on fire in Polihale State Park.

Victims in the attack said the perpetrators threw rocks and shouted slurs relating to the sexual orientation of the victims prior to setting the tent on fire. Two men were sentenced, then, to 5 years each in prison.

We all know of the heinous murder committed on James Byrd, who was dragged to death on a lonely, dusty Texas road. That shocked America. But in the case of Mr. Byrd, the Federal Government showed up to work because the Federal hate crimes law applies to issues of race. And the law enforcement folks in Texas will tell you that the Federal Government was very helpful in the pursuit, the prosecution, and the conviction of the murderers of James Byrd.

I think in that same year all of us felt horrified by the murder of Matthew Shepard in Wyoming. But in that case, because sexual orientation was not an allowed category under Federal law, the Federal Government was prohibited from showing up for work.

I wish all Americans could have been with me in my office when I was visited by Wyoming State Troopers—Republicans—advocating to me please support this because they were overwhelmed with the national focus that this case brought. They really could have used the help of the Federal Government.

That is the whole point of this. I personally changed my mind on this subject because of the murder of Matthew Shepard. Frankly, I was chagrined that more of my partisans were not at his vigil. I observed it in a hotel room on CNN in Oregon. I was disappointed that more of my folks weren't there.

Hatred doesn't care if you are a Republican or a Democrat. As Americans, we all ought to be willing to stand up and say: Gosh—at every level of government, local, State, and Federal—let us show up for work and prosecute these most heinous kinds of crimes and murders.

I know there are some good, faithful, religious people who believe they should oppose this law because of this one category—the category of sexual orientation. They believe that because of their faith and their religion they cannot support this. But I say you should support this not in spite of your faith, you ought to support it because of your faith.

The example that I find in the Scripture which is so compelling is that of Christ. When confronted with a woman who was about to be stoned because of adultery—he didn't endorse her lifestyle—he saved her life.

Should we do any less? I say to people of faith that I don't care how you pray. But if that story inspires you like it does me, because of your faith support this.

That reflects the best values of the human heart, and the highest values of the American people. We ought to say as a matter of law—law isn't a teacher, and, no, we can't enforce morality—but we can hold up the law and say this is what we believe.

The Ten Commandants are a great example of a law to the children of Israel. They didn't always obey. But it reflected their highest values and caused them to live up, in many cases, to the highest of ideals. We should not do any less.

I am proud to stand here as a supporter of this expansion of an old law that reflects our best values.

I call upon Republicans, Independents, and Democrats to understand the spirit behind what it is we are doing.

Since I have been a U.S. Senator, I have been privileged to serve on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Every time I leave the shores of this blessed land and confront conflicts in Europe, conflicts in Eurasia, and conflicts in Asia, I am astounded at the tribal angst and hatred that besets most parts of this world.

I thank God that we live in a land where we have two oceans, two centuries with two relatively peaceful neighbors, and a long time to avoid the development of these kinds of racial, cultural, and other kinds of differences that cause us to want to commit crime, violence, and murder against people because of their differences. That reflects the worst of humankind.

As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I have decried hate crimes—however you want to describe them—on many continents on this planet. As a Republican, I believe I cannot be silent about hate crimes committed at home. I think we all ought to step up to the high ideals that this law represents.

When I chaired the Subcommittee on Europe, we held a hearing about anti-Semitism. We were privileged to have Eli Wiesel come and speak to us. In that hearing, he said something about what motivates the kinds of angst and hatred that have beset the Jewish people for a millennia of time. I want to share with you his words.

He said to this committee:

> To hate is to deny the other person's humanity. It is to see in "the other" a reason to inspire not pride, but disdain; not solidarity, but exclusion. It is to choose simplistic phraseology instead of ideas. It is to allow its carrier to feel stronger than "the other," and thus superior to "the other." The hater . . . is vain, arrogant. He believes that he alone possesses the key to truth and justice. He alone has God's ear.

This law that we will be privileged to vote on in a few days makes it clear that we include—that we not exclude—what are called hate crimes. Why wouldn't we extend them to other Americans because they are demonstrably more vulnerable?

Gays and lesbians—why wouldn't you extend the protection to them? Do you hate them? I don't.

I believe it is possible on a principled ground to oppose some things that the gay community wants. I am not for gay marriage. But when it comes to public safety, the dignity of a job, the right to have a roof over your head, how can we withhold our help because we don't share a lifestyle?

I withhold those judgments. I say we should help because we are Americans, and because we aspire to the highest ideals of our Constitution and the highest ideals of the religious traditions—as varied as they are—that we hold in this country.

We are privileged to live in a land where we separate church and state.

I have said to people who are opposed to my support of this law, if you want to talk about sin, then go with me to church. If you want to talk about public policy, let us go together to the Senate, and figure out how to protect all people, because that is what our Constitution provides for.

I say to folks on my side, this shouldn't be a Republican-Democrat issue. This is an issue about the heart. In is an issue entirely appropriate to take up in a time and in a war on terrorism. Whether terrorism comes from a bin Laden, or whether terrorism comes from a couple of murderers in Wyoming, it is terror, nonetheless, foreign and domestic.

Our Constitution calls upon us in its Preamble to provide for the common defense, and to ensure domestic tranquility. Hate crime laws, since their origin, have helped us to do that. It hasn't stopped it. You can't legislate people to change their hearts. But you can help them to by putting up the law, and saying these are our highest values. We will enforce them with the force of law. By holding them up and setting the example, we can help change hearts and minds.

While this law to many is just symbolism, I tell you it can become substantive, if we all show up for work and live up to our best ideals and not fall to the lowest of traits of humankind.

I call upon all our colleagues to support this legislation. Let's do it with an enormous majority, and let's do it regardless of party affiliation. Let's do it because with all of these victims, we share the common thread that we are Americans.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE FBI REFORM ACT, THE TERRORIST BOMBING CONVENTION AND THE SUPPRESSION OF THE FINANCING OF TERRORISM CONVENTION IMPLEMENTATION ACT, THE ANTI-ATROCITY ALIEN DEPORTATION ACT AND THE MYCHAL JUDGE POLICE AND FIRE CHAPLAINS SAFETY OFFICERS' BENEFIT ACT

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to speak principally on behalf of four important pieces of legislation. Two have important implications for national security, a third would help keep war criminals and those who commit atrocities abroad out of our country and the fourth would add a degree of fairness for law enforcement victims of September 11. All have been cleared on the Democratic side of the aisle.

Three are being blocked by holds placed by anonymous Republican Senators. One has passed the Senate and is being held up by the Republican leadership in the House. I appeal, again, today to our Republican colleagues to stop holding these important bills hostage, remove your secret hold, or at least come forward and identify yourself and your concern so that we may debate and make bipartisan progress on these important legislative matters.

First is S. 1974, the FBI Reform Act, which I introduced with Senator GRASSLEY in February, after extensive oversight hearings.

This bill would strengthen the FBI in its fight against terrorism, and was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee in April of this year.

Since the attacks of September 11, and the anthrax attacks last fall, we have relied on the FBI to detect and prevent acts of catastrophic terrorism that endanger the lives of the American people and the institutions of our country. FBI reform was already important, but the terrorist attacks suffered by this country last year have imposed even greater urgency on improving the FBI. The Bureau is our front line of domestic defense against terrorists.

Even before those attacks, the Judiciary Committee's oversight hearings revealed serious problems at the FBI that needed strong congressional action to fix. We heard about a double standard in evaluations and discipline. We heard about record and information management problems and communications breakdowns between field offices and Headquarters that led to the belated production of documents in the Oklahoma City bombing case. Despite the fact that we have poured money into the FBI over the last 5 years, we heard that the FBI's computer systems were in dire need of modernization.

We heard about how an FBI supervisor, Robert Hanssen, was able to sell critical secrets to the Russians undetected for years without ever getting a polygraph. We heard that there were no fewer than 15 different areas of security at the FBI that needed fixing.

The FBI Reform Act tackles these problems with improved accountability, improved security both inside and outside the FBI and required planning to ensure the FBI is prepared to deal with the multitude of challenges we are facing.

Just over the past month, the FBI Director has referred to the Justice Department inspector general important matters about the handling of probative information like the Phoenix report before the 9-11 attacks. The FBI reform bill expands the Justice Department inspector general's authority to investigate all allegations of misconduct at the FBI. The FBI Reform Act also strengthens whistleblower protections for FBI employees who report misconduct to Members of Congress, as Minneapolis Field Office Agent Coleen M. Rowley did.

The FBI Reform Act also puts an end to statutory restrictions that contribute to the "double standard," where senior management officials are not disciplined as harshly for misconduct as line agents are. Agent Rowley complained about this double standard in her May 21 letter criticizing Bureau Headquarters about its handling of the Moussaoui case.

Just this week the Judiciary Committee held an extensive hearing with the FBI Director, the Department of Justice inspector general and Special Agent Rowley. Any doubts that this legislation is needed and needed without further delay had to be erased by their candid testimony.

The FBI Reform Act was unanimously reported by the oversight committee for the FBI and reflects our determination to make sure that the FBI is as good and strong as it can be, and, all the more today, given the higher stakes, as good and as strong as America needs the FBI to be. This reform bill is a long stride toward that goal. I urge the Republican Members who have blocked passage of this bill to come forward and identify themselves, to speak to Senator GRASSLEY and me about the importance of this legislation, and to share any concerns they may have so that we may proceed without further delay.

Last December I introduced S. 1770 to implement two antiterrorism treaties, the Terrorist Bombing Convention and the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism Convention. The anti-terrorist bombing bill would bring the United States into immediate compliance with important international conventions signed by the United States under President Clinton's leadership.

The two antiterrorism treaties at issue were transmitted to the Senate for ratification by President Clinton in 1999 and 2000, but not acted upon until the Senate reorganized under a Democratic majority last summer.

The United States signed these treaties after the tragic terrorist bombings at the United States embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. Before control of the Senate changed hands, there was no action taken on these treaties in the Foreign Relations Committee. The antibombing treaty in particular sat in the Foreign Relations Committee for approximately 2 years without action during the Clinton administration when the Senate was under Republican control. Senator BIDEN deserves credit for acting quickly to report these treaties within weeks after he assumed chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Yet even as Senator BIDEN was pushing to move the treaties themselves through the Senate, the Bush administration did not transmit proposed implementing legislation to the Judiciary Committee before or during the time that we were working together day and night to write the USA PATRIOT Act, the bipartisan antiterrorism legislation responding to the events of September 11. I remain puzzled why the administration felt that this measure should be separated from that effort.

Both treaties require the signatory nations to enact certain, precisely worded criminal provisions in their laws in order to be in compliance. That is what S. 1770, the Leahy bill, does. I introduced S. 1770, on December 5, 2001, shortly after passage of the USA PATRIOT Act, as a separate bill. This was the same day that the Senate agreed to ratify both treaties. I then tried to move the bill quickly through the Senate, but an anonymous Republican hold blocked passage.

Again this year I tried to move the bill through the Senate, but again there was an anonymous hold from the Republican side of the aisle which blocked its passage. Had there not been a hold placed on the bill last year, I am quite sure that we could have resolved any remaining issues in conference, as the Republican-controlled House was simultaneously passing its own version of my bill.

After the anonymous hold was placed on S. 1770 at the end of the last session, we received a letter from the Department of Justice in late January of this year about the bill.

The letter stated that the Department "support[ed] the legislation but recommend[ed] several modifications." None of the modifications which the Department recommended dealt with issues that were necessary for compliance with the treaties, the basic purpose of the bill. The Leahy bill would bring us into full compliance with those important obligations and take away any excuse from nations that are hesitant to cooperate in the war against terrorism.

The recent spate of horrible suicide bombings around the world and the fact that the convention prohibiting terrorist financing entered into force on April 10, 2002, demonstrate the pressing need for this legislation. As if that was not enough, last month the FBI Director warned that he believes that suicide bombings in the United States are "inevitable," bringing home the point that this legislation is required both to fight terrorism at home and abroad. Nevertheless, S. 1770 has been subjected to an anonymous Republican hold since December of last year.

In the post-September 11 environment it is almost beyond my understanding why any Member of this body would secretly obstruct passage of an important piece of antiterrorism legislation—yet here we are in June, blocked from compliance with two international terrorism treaties by a secret Republican hold.

The third bill is S. 864, the Anti-Atrocity Alien Deportation Act, which I introduced this year and was reported by the Judiciary Committee, with bipartisan support, to close loopholes in our immigration laws that have allowed war criminals and human rights abusers to enter and remain in this country.

I have been appalled that this country has become a safe haven for those who exercised power in foreign countries to terrorize, rape, murder, and torture innocent civilians. A recent report by Amnesty International claims that nearly 150 alleged human rights abusers have been identified living here, but warns that this number may be as high as 1,000.

Observers have noted the irony that in the wake of the September 11, 2001, attacks, hundreds of foreigners have been rounded up though not charged with any terrorism-related crime.

Yet at the same time, "hundreds, if not thousands, of foreign nationals who have been plausibly accused of the most heinous human rights crimes, including torture and assassination, either have lived or still live freely in the U.S." [William Schulz, "The Torturers Among Us," New York Review, p. 22, April 25, 2002.]

This bill would not only add the new grounds, but also expand current grounds, for inadmissibility and deportation, by barring those aliens who have engaged, outside the United States, in "torture" and "extrajudicial killing" and removing artificial limitations on the current grounds for exclusion for aliens who commit "genocide" and "particularly severe violations of religious freedom." This bill is important for the victims of these heinous crimes who seek refuge in this country and important for Americans to show that we will not tolerate perpetrators of genocide, extrajudicial killing and torture, living among us.

I urge the Republican Members who have blocked passage of this bill to come forward and identify themselves, to share any concerns they may have so that we may proceed without further delay.

I was pleased when the Senate did take up and pass the Mychal Judge Police and Fire Chaplains Public Safety Officers' Benefit Act of 2002 that I sponsored with Senators CAMPBELL, SCHUMER, CLINTON, and BIDEN.

Named for Chaplain Mychal Judge, who was killed while responding with the New York City Fire Department to the September 11 terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center, this legislation recognizes the invaluable service of police and fire chaplains in crisis situations by allowing for their eligibility in the Public Safety Officers' Benefit Program. Father Judge, while deemed eligible for public safety officer benefits, was survived by his two sisters who, under current law, are ineligible to receive payments through the PSOB Program. This is simply wrong and must be remedied.

Indeed, Father Judge is among 10 public safety officers who were killed on September 11, but who are ineligible for Federal death benefits because they died without spouses, children, or parents. This bill would retroactively correct this injustice by expanding the list of those who may receive public safety officer benefits to the beneficiaries named on the most recently executed life insurance policy of the deceased officer. This change would go into effect on September 11 of last year to make sure the families of Father Judge and the nine other fallen heroes receive their public safety officer benefits.

In addition, this bill would retroactively restructure the Public Safety Officers' Benefit Program to specifically include chaplains as members of the law enforcement and fire units they serve, and would make these chaplains eligible for the one-time $250,000 benefit available to public safety officers who have been permanently disabled as a result of injuries sustained in the line of duty, or to the survivors of officers who have died.

This measure is strongly supported by the National Association of Police Organization, the Fraternal Order of Police, and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

Despite its Senate's passage and in spite of the fact that the House Judiciary Committee has favorably reported the House companion bill with bipartisan support to the House, the House Republican leadership has refused to follow through with passage of this measure. I urge the House Republican leadership to reconsider its decision and allow this important matter to proceed to final passage.

These bills are not alone in being blocked by anonymous Republican holds. Holds have been placed on other important bills that the Judiciary Committee has acted upon and reported favorably to the Senate. Let me just cite a couple examples: S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, which I introduced after the Enron debacle to restore confidence in our securities; S. 2179, the Law Enforcement Tribute Act, which was introduced by Senator CARNAHAN to help State and local police pay for memorials to honor fallen officers; and S. 407, the Madrid Protocol Implementation Act, to help American businesses better protect their intellectual property in the international marketplace.

In addition to the Mychal Judge Police and Fire Chaplains Public Safety Officers Benefit Act, many other Senate-passed are languishing in the House of Representatives. These include the Federal Judiciary Protection Act, S. 1099, which I cosponsored with Senator GORDON SMITH; the James Guelff and Chris McCurley Body Armor Act, S. 166, which was sponsored by Senator FEINSTEIN; and the TEACH Act, S. 487, which I sponsored with Senator HATCH. These bipartisan measures were passed by unanimous consent through the Senate last year, but have been held hostage without action in the House for too many months.

None of these 10 matters should be partisan, yet again and again, anonymous Republican holds have stopped Senate and congressional action. I appeal to my Republican colleagues in the Senate to lift their secret holds and to the Republicans in both Houses to stop obstructing these bipartisan bills, that are intended to protect our national security, our public safety, America's borders, and American businesses.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ENTREPRENEURS OF THE YEAR

• Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to Melissa Mabon and Brooke Savage, two of New Hampshire's Entrepreneurs of the Year. It is doubtless that their success is a tribute to their hard work and dedication.

As cofounders of Pragmatech Software Inc. in Amherst, Brooke and Melissa have built a company from conception into what it is today. Their business knowledge and planning have led them to build a company with no outside investment giving them greater flexibility with respect to management decisions. Pragmatech, which was founded in 1994, offers several services including an expert knowledge base that supports automated responses to "requests for proposals" and "form-based proposals." They also feature programs that assemble proposals, provide point-by-point responses to specifications, publish on the Web, and gauge the effectiveness of proposals, just to name a few.

It is my great pleasure and honor to represent Brooke and Melissa in the United States Senate and wish them all the best in future endeavors.•

TRIBUTE TO KENTUCKY RURAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION

• Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to the Kentucky Rural Health Association. The Kentucky Rural Health Association recently held its annual conference in Frankfort, and I would like to take a few minutes today to voice my support for this organization. The Association is helping to shape and implement changes to improve the health of rural Kentuckians.

Since 1999, the Kentucky Rural Health Association has worked to create an equitable and effective health care environment, in terms of access and distribution, for rural Kentuckians. Their efforts in educating the public, empowering the people, and positively influencing government policy and legislation have been extremely beneficial to individuals and families throughout the Commonwealth.

While I regret that I was unable to attend their conference this year, I commend all the members of the association for safeguarding Kentucky's right to affordable and accessible health care. Adequate healthcare is critical to improving an individual's quality of life, and I urge them to continue their hard work on behalf of rural Kentuckians.•

TRIBUTE TO MAVERICK LEZAR

• Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I rise today to acknowledge the achievement of Maverick Lezar, a fourth grade student at the Hockaday School in Dallas, TX. Maverick wrote a wonderful poem that earned first place in the 2002 Poetry Society of Texas contest. Annually, the Poetry Society sponsors a Poetry in Schools contest which is open to any Texas student from first grade through college. This contest recognizes and encourages talented students and fosters their creativity as aspiring writers and poets.

Maverick Lezar's award winning poem, "God Bless Me," speaks to the strength and spirit of America. It serves as a striking reminder of the beauty in our Nation's physical landscape as well as the ideals for which America stands.

I am as powerful as the burning sun.
I am as brave as the cobra standing tall.
I am as brilliant as a gold carriage glinting in the sun.

God bless me,
I am the thing that makes you free.

I am as strong as a bald eagle soaring high.
I am as gentle as the lovebird's song.
I am as beautiful as the weeping willow's sway.

God bless me,
I am the thing that makes you free.

Call me and I'll listen.
Listen and I'll call.
I echo through the mountains.
I whisper through the fields.
I sing through the river.
I yell across the hills.
Wherever you go
Whatever you see
There will always be at least
A little bit of me.

I am America
The proudest of them all. •

CONGRATULATING THE GIRL SCOUTS ON 90 YEARS OF ACHIEVEMENT

• Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, 90 years ago on March 12, 1912, the first troop of 18 Girl Scouts met in the United States. To date, there are nearly 4 million girls and adults who are part of this extraordinary program.

Today, at the Denver Zoo in my home State of Colorado, Girl Scouts, their families, and others interested in scouting will be celebrating this 90th anniversary with hands-on activities and a variety of entertainment. I would like to congratulate the Mile Hi Council of the Girl Scouts on this historic achievement and wish them all the best during today's celebration. What a fantastic way to share the efforts of the Girl Scouts nationwide.

Throughout the 20th century, the Girl Scouts have been a visible force behind efforts to serve people in times of national unrest. During World War I, they sold war bonds and collected peach pits for the manufacturing of gas mask filters. Girls collaborated to learn about food preservation and conservation by canning fruits and vegetables.

When the Great Depression hit, troops of Girl Scouts led community relief efforts to provide the things necessary for basic survival. They collected food and prepared meals for the poor, carved wooden toys for children, and assisted in hospitals to treat those in need of medical care.

By the 1940s, women's involvement in our national security was on the rise after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, and many women were taking over positions once dominated by men. The Girl Scouts led the vanguard of young women who were interested in helping those enlisted overseas as well as those trying to maintain a sense of normalcy here in the United States. They collected over 1 million articles of clothing for victims of war overseas, and put in numerous hours dedicated to farm aid projects. Additionally, they were part of efforts to teach women survival skills during raids and blackouts.

The Girl Scouts have left their mark on endeavors to improve social climate. In 1952, Ebony Magazine reported on their "progress toward breaking down racial taboos." They launched a campaign in the sixties to encourage girls to respect every aspect of themselves and to get to know others who are fundamentally different whether it be by race, national origin, or religion.

In the last 20 years, the Girl Scouts have worked together to tackle issues plaguing society's well-being, such as drug addiction, violent crime, environmental destruction, and the AIDS epidemic. Through collaborative work with the government and local communities, girls have promoted the positive influences of literacy, personal health, and individual responsibility.

Now more than ever, we are looking to our young people for a collective face of hope and prosperity for this Nation's future. We have witnessed the vulnerability of human life, but know the strength of collective effort and the potential for individual integrity. Our national security and viability as a community depends on this strength.

However, recent reports indicate that girls are less likely to pursue careers in math, science, or technology—fields vital to our progress in this global economy. Sometime during their teen or preteen years, many girls lose their zest in the classroom and, unfortunately, conform to attitudes that boys are inherently better in math and science.

The Girl Scouts are, again, at the forefront of this issue by confronting the disparity head on. They have collaborated with the National Science Foundation to provide opportunities for girls interested in studying wildlife and environment in Antarctica. In addition, they have created programs to provide girls with hands-on technology training, computer science skills, and access to information on physics and engineering. Most importantly, the Girl Scouts give girls tools to close the gender gap and the confidence to succeed in these traditionally male-dominated fields.

The Girl Scouts have fostered an environment Where Girls Grow Strong—their modern mantra. But, while the activities of the Girl Scouts may change over the years, its commitment to young women nationwide is resolute. By encouraging personal responsibility, social awareness, community service, and individual freedom, the Girl Scouts have shaped the physical and mental well-being of young women everywhere.

Thank you for allowing me to congratulate the Girl Scouts on 90 years of exceptional achievement. I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing them all the best in the years to come, and in giving a "Mile Hi" salute to the Girl Scouts celebrating today in Denver and throughout the Nation.

I ask that the Girl Scout Law be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

THE GIRL SCOUT LAW

I will do my best to be honest and fair friendly and helpful, considerate and caring,
courageous and strong, and responsible for what I say and do, and to respect myself and others, respect authority,
use resources wisely,
make the world a better place, and be a sister to every Girl Scout.•

A TRIBUTE TO ENTREPRENEUR OF THE YEAR

• Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to an outstanding businessman, Robert Scott, on receiving New Hampshire Entrepreneur of the Year. His outstanding business practices and understanding have no doubt brought him to this place.

Scott cofounded Octave Communications in 1998 with audio conferencing in mind. Since then, the systems that have been produced include the newest model that allows for wireless voice conferencing. With many more options available Octave offers browser-based scheduling, management and control for reservation-less conferencing over traditional public switched telephone networks and Voice over Internet Protocol Networks. Scott's effort has paid off in the growth of an up and coming company that is sure to make its mark on New Hampshire.

It is always my distinct honor and privilege to represent fine businessmen like Robert Scott in the United States Senate.●

TRIBUTE TO ED LAWRENCE, WILDLIFE ARTIST WORKING TO HELP U.S. SOLDIERS

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, now, more than ever, Americans are expressing their patriotism. Patriotism means different things to different people, but for some, like Ed Lawrence, patriotism comes through his "determination" to help others.

Mr. Lawrence, a wildlife artist from McGregor, IA, is a retired game warden and a U.S. Air Force veteran. After hearing President George W. Bush's address to the Nation following the September 11 attacks, Lawrence was moved into taking action. Although unsure of what contribution he could make, he retreated to his studio and began to sketch. Out of his sketches rose images of the American bald eagle with the Stars and Stripes waving behind it. These heart-felt images became the foundation for Mr. Lawrence's work, "Determination."

With "Determination," Mr. Lawrence was able to give back to the nation. At the end of last year, Mr. Lawrence devoted his energy to the Grant Wood Chapter of the Red Cross in Cedar Rapids. From the proceeds of his "Determination" prints, the group was able to pay the shipping costs of care packages sent to troops on hardship assignments in Saudi Arabia, Bosnia, Kosovo, Kuwait and Uzbekistan. The care packages were meant to send a bit of home abroad and included puzzles, games, footballs, microwave popcorn, toiletries, gum and magazines, among other items to boost the troops' morale.

In addition to covering the costs of sending out the care packages, Mr. Lawrence created 911 numbered prints as a special tribute to U.S. troops. He donates these prints to various community group fundraisers. The limited edition prints go to groups willing to sell a print in support of the Grant Wood Chapter's project.

U.S. Armed Force bases that receive donations also receive a special copy of "Determination." Numbered prints were reserved for Veterans Administration hospitals in Iowa City and Des Moines, and a copy was presented on the floor of the Iowa House at the Iowa State Capitol.

Mr. Lawrence is hoping to take the project nationwide and is working with the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, and the American Red Cross to do just that. He and his wife, Chris, have made appearances nationwide to promote the project and received warm responses, as they should.

The "determination," of Ed Lawrence to spread patriotism and promote morale nationwide and across the seas has lifted the spirits of troops and civilians alike. Thank you, Mr. Lawrence, for setting such a positive and patriotic example for fellow Iowans and Americans to follow.●

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that privileges of the floor be granted to Seema Balwani, a congressional fellow in my office, during today's session.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 2600

Mr. REID. Mr. President, S. 2600, introduced today by Senator DODD and others is at the desk. I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill by title for the first time.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2600) to ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I now ask for its second reading, but I object to my own request on behalf of the Republicans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this effort to move this legislation forward has been going on since December. We have tried on many occasions to get the minority to agree on coming forward and agreeing to a unanimous consent request so that we can move forward in this body to pass terrorism insurance. We have been unable to do that. We have tried in many different ways to do that. We have had the basic bill with two, three, five amendments. We have been very willing to work with them in any way to move this forward.

The real estate industry, the insurance industry, and builders all over the country are desperate for this insurance. After September 11, many businesses all over the country have been unable to go forward with construction projects. So I hope this rule 14 on which we have just moved will allow us to have this legislation brought before the Senate, and we believe we have agreed to come forward with a bill. Some believe there should be tort reform. We have agreed in the underlying legislation that we would agree there should not be punitive damages for the money the Government puts forward. We have agreed to that. A lot of our constituents don't like that. We have consented to that.

If people believe more should be done, let them offer an amendment. We can agree to a time agreement or not, but this legislation is very important to the economic viability and vitality of this country. I hope this effort will not be thwarted. This legislation has been pushed by Senators DODD, SARBANES, and SCHUMER, and it will go forward.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—H.R. 2143

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand that H.R. 2143 is at the desk. I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill by title for the first time.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2143) to make the repeal of the estate tax permanent.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask for its second reading, but I object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.

ORDER FOR RECORD TO REMAIN OPEN UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD remain open today until 2 p.m. for the introduction of legislation and submission of statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, JUNE 10, 2002

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until 2 p.m., Monday, June 10; that following the prayer and the pledge, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and there be a period for morning business until 3 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each with the time divided between the two leaders or their designees; that at 3 p.m., the Senate resume consideration of S. 625; further, that the live quorum with respect to the cloture motion filed earlier today be waived and that Senators have until 3 p.m. on Monday, June 10, to file first-degree amendments to the hate crimes legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the next vote will occur on Monday at about 5:45 p.m.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 2 P.M. MONDAY, JUNE 10, 2002

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the Lao-Hmong American Coalition to thank my colleagues in both the House and Senate for their unanimous vote in favor of a National Lao-Hmong Recognition Day. Mr. Yang Chee, president of the Lao-Hmong American Coalition, has asked me to relay his own deep gratitude to the United States Congress for passing this historic proclamation.

During the Vietnam War, the Lao-Hmong people were one of this country's most loyal allies. They fought alongside U.S. soldiers against the communists and the North Vietnamese, sacrificing their lives for freedom and democracy. Many of these brave people now call the United States their home, becoming an integral part of American society. I would like to take this opportunity to thank Mr. Chee and all of the Lao-Hmong people for their dedication to this country and its ideals.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution proclaiming National Lao-Hmong Recognition Day was passed unanimously through both houses of Congress. Once again, I thank my colleagues for their support, and it is my hope that President Bush will join us in expressing the gratitude of this nation to the Lao-Hmong people.

This long-overdue day of recognition will take place in July. May it promote a sense of understanding and appreciation for the sacrifices made in the name of freedom and democracy. I urge all Americans to take a moment on this day to thank our brave and loyal friends, the Lao-Hmong.

RECOGNIZING THE SUCCESS OF HMSHOST OF BETHESDA, MARYLAND

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and celebrate the expansion of HMSHost in Bethesda, Maryland, and to commemorate its commitment to the State of Maryland. This 100-year-old company is the fifth largest company by revenues in Montgomery County, Maryland, and it is greatly expanding its operations in the County.

HMSHost's presence in Maryland remains strong despite the travel slowdown resulting from events related to September 11th. Operating in 74 airports worldwide, HMSHost is the world's largest food, beverage, and retail concessions provider to the travel industry with revenues of $1.6 billion and a total of 26, 000 employees. The company serves 350 million customers a year and is top ranked by the International Air Transportation Association for concessions programs.

The success of HMSHost is due to the hard work of its associates, the leadership of John J. McCarthy, and the outstanding service that the company provides to travelers throughout the world. In its operations at Baltimore-Washington International Airport and Maryland Turnpike travel plazas, the company has delivered quality food, beverages, and merchandise to more than one hundred and fifty million travelers.

Our state is well served by the presence of HMSHost.

H.R. 4737

HON. JAMES H. MALONEY

OF CONNECTICUT

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4737 in its current form. The bill the proponents have brought to the floor today is totally inadequate in regard to family child care. H.R. 4737 puts families in an entirely untenable position between their desire and need to work, on the one hand, and their need for quality child care during their working hours, on the other hand. In addition, the bill places very costly, unfunded mandates on the states.

Currently, an estimated 15 million children in America who are eligible for child care assistance lack coverage because states do not have the financial resources. Many states are facing budget deficits arising from the recession of 2001–2002. In my home state of Connecticut, for example, the government is already experiencing a deficit in excess of $500 million dollars, and, accordingly, child care assistance for low-income families who have been off welfare for 2 or more years has already been frozen. Even worse, as of June 1, Connecticut will no longer be able to provide child care assistance to families just leaving welfare. Regardless of income, they will not receive any child care assistance at all.

The unfunded mandates created in this bill add to the states' child care burden without providing the resources required to meet this critical need. Indeed, the child care funding in H.R. 4737 is barely enough to keep up with inflation, never mind provide for the roughly 35 percent increase in work hours called for in this bill.

CBO estimates that the unfunded mandates in this bill will require states to spend an additional $11 billion dollars over the next 5 years. Of that $3.8 billion dollars is mandated for child care—four times more than the proponents are willing to provide. Connecticut's share will be $66.5 million over 5 years, substantially adding to Connecticut's deficit.

The bill's proponents may say that they support child care, but their rhetoric is meaningless when they don't provide the necessary resources.

Without providing more money for child care, this bill will:

Keep families and states from meeting the new welfare requirements.

Keep children from reaching school ready to learn.

Keep families from getting and keeping jobs.

Keep increasing state deficits and financial problems.

And, most regrettably, keep families from getting off and staying off welfare—defeating the very purpose of this legislation.

Work is critically important, and I support strengthening the welfare work requirements, just as I supported the original passage of welfare reform in 1996. That's not the issue. The issue is: more work requires more child care. All working parents know that you can't keep a job without also having child care. Yet that's what the proponents of this bill ask families, and our states, to do.

My motion to recommit would help more working families afford quality child care, so that parents can be employed and their children can learn. Specifically, this motion to recommit adds an additional $11 billion over 5 years to meet the unfunded mandates of this bill. This will allow states to provide child care for the approximately 80 percent of eligible families who are currently on waiting lists, and it will allow states to provide child care for the families who will be moving to work or expanding their work hours under this legislation.

I support strengthening work requirements, but we must provide families with appropriate child care resources to allow parents to increase their time at work without leaving a child home alone.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on this motion to recommit, so that the bill can be returned to us containing the child care funding it, our families, and our states, so clearly need.

HONORING DR. ELLEN CAMPBELL FOR A LIFETIME OF ACHIEVEMENT

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, It gives me great pleasure to rise today to join the Marymount College family in congratulating Dr. Ellen Campbell as she is honored with their Lifetime Achievement Award. An outstanding educator, dedicated colleague, and

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

dear friend, this award is a reflection of her many contributions both professionally and personally.

This year marks her fiftieth reunion year as an alumna and you will find many who remember Dr. Campbell in at least one of the many roles she assumed at Marymount. Whether at the Tarrytown campus or in London with the Study Abroad program, Dr. Campbell touched the lives of thousands of Marymount students. An alumna myself, I have many fond memories of Dr. Campbell when I was studying in London. An educator and administrator, Dr. Campbell willingly dedicated her time and energy to ensure that her students obtained the knowledge and skills they needed to succeed in their adult lives.

A professor of English, Academic Dean and Coordinator of the London Study Abroad program, Dr. Campbell was the driving force behind many of Marymount's successful programs. In England, she dedicated much of her time to establishing the college's connections with the University of London and developing the drama program in cooperation with the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. Upon her return to the States, she involved herself with the programs for working adults, quickly becoming a strong and vocal advocate for their causes.

After leaving Marymount, Dr. Campbell assumed a position with Woodbury University in Burbank, California. Realizing that adults wanting to return to college needed some flexibility, her time in California was spent coordinating and establishing Weekend Colleges at Woodbury University and Mount Saint Mary's College. Her efforts, in New York and California have allowed thousands of working adults to obtain degrees in higher education.

Even retirement has not stopped Dr. Campbell's seemingly tireless energy. She has continued as a consultant for Woodbury University, has been active in arranging study/travel programs for schools and colleges, and frequently teaches short courses in the Weekend College at Mount St. Mary's College. An active member of the Beaumont Public Library, she used her background in education to the community's benefit by establishing a literacy program. She is a tremendous asset to her community and for those of us who have known her—whether professionally or personally—we consider ourselves fortunate indeed.

I am deeply honored to rise today and join the friends, alumni, faculty and administration of Marymount College in extending my sincere thanks and appreciation to Dr. Ellen Campbell for her unparalleled commitment and dedication—past, present and future—as she is awarded this year's Lifetime Achievement Award. What an indelible mark she has left on us all.

IN RECOGNITION OF TOP STUDENT HISTORIANS

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an outstanding history program in Colorado and throughout the United States. National History Day is a year-long nonprofit program through which students in grades 6–12 research and create historical projects related to a broad theme, culminating in an annual contest. This year's National History Day theme, "Revolution, Reaction, Reform in History," encompasses endless possibilities for exploration. Each year more than 700,000 students participate in this nationwide event that encourages students to delve into various facets of world, national, regional, or local history and to produce original research projects.

By encouraging young Coloradoans to take advantage of the wealth of primary historical resources available to them, students are able to gain a richer understanding of historical issues, ideas, people and events. Students in this program learn how to analyze a variety of primary sources such as photographs, letters, posters, maps, artifacts, sound recordings and motion pictures. This significant academic exercise encourages intellectual growth while helping students to develop critical thinking and problem solving skills that will help them manage and use information.

I want to congratulate the outstanding accomplishments of the following students that will represent Colorado at the National History Day national contest, June 9–13 at the University of Maryland: Barbara Bragaglia, Darcy Evans, James Norton, Megan Fong, Emily Gu, Lili Mundle and Masha Godina.

Their respective teachers also deserve our respect today. They have proven that excellent teaching must go beyond the 8 to 3 school day. Leigh Campbell-Hale of Fairview High School and Andy Aiken of Boulder High School are fine examples of the best in the teaching profession. Their encouragement and dedication has encouraged these students to strive to excellence and be successful in their endeavors. I would also like to thank Nancy Brown, State Coordinator of Colorado History Day, for all her hard work on behalf of these students.

These impressive students represent educational excellence in America. Every student in Colorado should have the opportunity to participate in this enriching experience. I commend the coordinator of our state program and the Department of History at the University of Colorado at Boulder for their commitment to expanding History Day in Colorado. The National History Day program is truly a great asset to Colorado educators for instilling academic curiosity in our youth.

AFTER 57 YEARS, BOB BRAEGER TO RECEIVE DISTINGUISHED FLYING CROSS

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

OF WISCONSIN

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 23, 2002, my friend, Robert Braeger, will finally be presented with the Distinguished Flying Cross that he was awarded, but never received, over 57 years ago.

As a student at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, he and a group of friends were shocked when the December 7, 1941 Green Bay Packers and Chicago Bears game was interrupted with news of the attack on Pearl Harbor. Bob knew at that moment that he wanted to serve and defend his country.

Enlisting in the Army Air Corps, Braeger was commissioned as a 2nd Lieutenant and assigned to the 34th Bombardment Group in continental Europe as a navigator on the B–24 Liberator bomber, "Bambi."

Bambi's crew of ten guided her through thirty bombing missions over enemy-occupied territory. On his thirtieth mission, Bambi's crew crashed into a French field after the plane lost an engine. After returning to Paris with the help of French citizens, and due to their courageous and dedicated service in the European Theater, Bambi's crew was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross. When he was discharged, Bob returned with a treasure chest of awards, but the DFC was not included.

When Bob is not with his wife Deanna or his seven children, he has remained active in recognizing the achievements and actions of area veterans since his days in the Army Air Corps. A co-chair of the Wisconsin Veterans War Memorial/Milwaukee, he led the fundraising campaign to refurbish the memorial for veterans and their families.

The 7,875 homeless veterans in Wisconsin have also found a friend in Bob Braeger. He has been involved with the National Coalition of Homeless Veterans, an organization that works to end homelessness among veterans by shaping public policy, educating the public, and building the capacity of service providers.

During his service, Braeger developed a deep sense of appreciation for the contributions of minority soldiers. He now volunteers his time to recognize these distinguished men and women by working with the National Association of Black Veterans.

Over half of a century later, it is a pleasure to see this patriotic citizen receive the long overdue, and thoroughly deserved, Distinguished Flying Cross. Congratulations, Bob Braeger.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 212, H.R. 4664, final passage, had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

DEMOCRATIC SUBSTITUTE ON H.R. 4737

HON. JAMES H. MALONEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4737 in its current form.

The Republican bill provides strong work requirements, which I support. However, the bill is fatally flawed as it abandons families' needs to take care of their primary responsibility—their children. As I said during the debate on my related motion to recommit, this bill also imposes an unfair, unfunded mandate on the states—at a time when many of our states, including Connecticut, are experiencing significant budget deficits. Due to the lack of child care resources in the underlying bill, and the financial burden imposed on our states, I am unable to vote in favor of the work requirements I prefer.

The Democratic Substitute would have provided the appropriate child care resources to allow parents to work full time. It is critically important that children are taken care of while their parents are at work. It is equally important, however, for parents to achieve full time employment that will allow families to become self-sustaining. Although the Democratic proposal strengthens current work requirements, the requirement is not sufficient. TANF families, given the necessary resources, should engage in full time employment like other working Americans. For this reason I cannot support the Democratic Alternative.

HONORING PETER C. YOUNG ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding member of our community, Peter C. Young, as family, friends, and colleagues gather to celebrate his retirement after a thirty-five year career in education.

Peter has been the Executive Director of Area Cooperative Education Services for over three decades. His commitment and hard work has brought a number of important programs and services to the twenty-six school districts located in South Central Connecticut. ACES is one of six educational service centers that were formed under Connecticut State Statute in 1970. A result of recognizing that school districts must work together to meet the ever-changing needs of local education systems, these centers provide an environment where quality programs can be planned, developed and implemented—giving our young people access to the best educational opportunities possible. In addition to his leadership of ACES, he has also implemented programs to benefit local school district teachers and administrators.

Education is the cornerstone of success and the most critical link between our young people and their future. Throughout our country, we look to our towns and cities to provide these invaluable skills to our children. Throughout his professional life, Peter has embraced this responsibility and diligently worked to ensure that our school districts have had the resources to succeed. Working closely with the ACES Governing Board, made up of representatives from each of the member school districts, Peter's unparalleled leadership has benefitted our most precious resource—our children.

Peter's work extends far beyond his career with ACES. His work with a myriad of local, state, and national organizations and associations has and continues to enrich the lives of many. As a member of the Branford Interfaith Housing Cooperation Board, the Connecticut Hospital Association, and the Association of Educational Service Agencies—just to name a few—Peter has used his talents in a variety of areas to make a real difference in the lives of others. His generosity, compassion and commitment is reflected in the many awards and commendations he has received. We have been fortunate to have such an individual working so diligently on our behalf.

Through his many contributions both personally and professionally, Peter has touched the lives of thousands. It is my great honor to join his wife, Judith; daughters, Elizabeth and Kristin; family friends, and colleagues in extending my sincere congratulations and very best wishes to Peter Young as he celebrates his retirement.

He has also been named as one of the Best Lawyers in America for crimimal defense for nearly 15 years.

THE WEATHER SAFETY ACT

HON. J.C. WATTS, JR.

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the Weather Safety Act is legislation to help the many towns across America that face recurring threats from severe weather. Whether it is tornados, hurricanes, droughts, or floods, the threats to life and property require a response.

Farmers in my home state of Oklahoma have suffered years of severe drought. The federal government must help these farmers and communities assess their vulnerability to the losses that often accompany severe weather, and develop plans to improve their resilience to such events and reduce the economic impacts.

While current federal research on global climate change focuses on long-term trends, we must also develop understanding and strategies that can be put to immediate use in dealing with severe weather. Creating an Office of Vulnerability and Resilience Research to coordinate and advance short-term climatic research will put us on track toward this goal. A unique "Vulnerability Scorecard" system will permit systematic evaluation of regional vulnerabilities, as well as providing a benchmark against which future improvements can be measured.

Call this a "no-regrets" strategy. It is a climate policy that can be enacted right now, in the absence of scientific agreement on the magnitude and extent of the impact of increasing atmospheric carbon dioxide on climate. And it is a strategy that recognizes that many things can contribute to a community's vulnerability, including changing demographics and shifts in the nation's wealth distribution.

As a result of this program, I foresee a stronger partnership between scientists at the cutting edge of climate research and city planners who are on the front lines of the battle with nature's violent side. I challenge our best scientists to turn some of their attention to shorter-term climate and weather variations and produce the kind of assessments and resiliency research that can help all of our citizens, from elected officials and first-responders to farmers and families. Strengthening our communities makes America stronger, and that is what this bill is all about.

INVESTING IN AMERICA'S FUTURE ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS

OF MARYLAND

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

The House in Committee of the Whole House of the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4664) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2003, 2004, and 2005 for the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes:

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4664, the Investing in America's Future Act, which authorizes the National Science Foundation (NSF) and places the foundation on a track to double it's budget in five years and to bolster undergraduate science, math, and engineering education. This measure authorizes a 15 percent increase in funding for the NSF for the next three years, starting with $5.5 billion in FY 2003, increases funding for major research equipment, and requires NSF to submit reports to Congress that will aid in the management of the foundation.

The NSF has the mission of supporting science and engineering in general and funding basic research across many subject areas. The majority of the research supported by the NSF is conducted at our nation's colleges and universities. The monies from NSF help with scholarships, fellowships, and the recruitment and training of our next generation of researchers and scientists. This funding ensures that America's scientists are competitive in the global marketplace.

NSF funding is a critical factor in determining whether students pursue postgraduate degrees in science and engineering. Doubling the NSF's budget will strengthen science research, development, and education. America's future directly depends on research conducted at our nation's schools. In fact, just this morning I meet with a group of researchers in my district, from Johns Hopkins, that rely on grants from NSF to conduct research. Many medical and technology breakthroughs have occurred because of the NSF funded basic research.

Millions of dollars have been given to schools and school districts in my state of Maryland and across the nation. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCU) and minority education and outreach programs will benefit from the across-the-board increase in NSF's budget. Two HBCU's, Morgan State and Coppin State, in my district, will be able to continue and expand programs at their institutions because of NSF support. Additionally, the Maryland State Department of Education has used NSF funds to improve school curriculum and encourage bright and talented students to pursue careers in the sciences.

I would also like to thank the Science Committee and Congresswoman EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON for all of her hard work and her unfailing support of NSF. She has been a champion for the doubling of NSF's budget.

Being the leader in math, science, and engineering research is important for our nation and the world. In order to achieve this goal, federal investment is imperative. This is a good bill because it does invest in America's future and deserves the support of all of my colleagues.

TRIBUTE TO ELIZABETH RICHARDSON

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Elizabeth H. Richardson, a citizen of Colorado, who for the past 38 years has been a vital member of our State's political, educational and social fabric.

Elizabeth has recently retired from Colorado Open Lands, where she served with distinction for the past ten years, working to preserve Colorado's open space for future generations. Her commitment to Colorado's environment continues today with her service on the Colorado Coalition of Land Trusts. Elizabeth has also served on the Board of Thorne Ecological Institute and was a member of the Denver Chamber of Commerce's Energy Legislation Task Force. Her interest in public lands and open space was also enhanced by her service as a director on the Colorado Open Space Council. It is through these outstanding commitments to Colorado's environment and her devotion to the protection of our Western lands that Elizabeth has set a shining example for all who choose to serve their country and their communities.

A native of Massachusetts, Elizabeth graduated from Radcliffe College and completed graduate studies at the University of Southern California and the University of Denver, as well as studying ecology at Metropolitan State College of Denver.

Elizabeth came to Colorado in 1963 where she quickly became a political force to be dealt with. A member of The League of Women Voters since 1963, she has chaired their Environment Committee, served as the League's Metro Denver President, and lobbied on environmental and transportation issues at the Colorado State Legislature.

Colorado's public servants have also benefited from Elizabeth's commitment to their campaigns and staffs. She has served as a House District captain for more than 20 years, was a county campaign coordinator for Democratic National Committeeman Ray Kogovsek, served on the transition committee for Governor-elect Richard D. Lamm, has been a campaign manager for Denver City Council member Doug Linkhart, served as the Issues Coordinator for Josie Heath for U.S. Senate, has been the treasurer of Colorado House of Representatives member Andrew Romanoff, and served on the senior policy staff of Governor Richard D. Lamm. Elizabeth also was twice a candidate for the Colorado House of Representatives, in 1976 and 1980.

Her commitment to lifelong learning and teaching began in 1959 when she was an assistant biology teacher in Australia and continued as a drama teacher in Concord, Massachusetts in the early 1960's. She has since served on the Denver Public Library Friends Foundation and has been a steadfast member of the Simon's Rock College of Bard Board of Directors for more than a decade. Elizabeth's passion for learning continues today with her 20 years of leadership on the Board of the Rocky Mountain Women's Institute, guiding this outstanding regional organization which supports and promotes women artists, writers and scholars.

A writer, a reader, a teacher, a community activist, a proud mother and grandmother, an adventurer and world traveler, but most importantly, a role model for us all. Colorado—its lands, its schools, its public servants and its citizens—owe Elizabeth Hall Richardson gratitude and appreciation for her dedicated service.

I wish her well in her future endeavors as I am sure she will continue to improve the quality of life in Colorado.

IN TRIBUTE TO THE SUSSEX COUNTY REPUBLICAN WOMEN'S CLUB

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to a praiseworthy group of women from my home state of Delaware, the Sussex County Republican Women's Club.

Fifty years ago, in 1952, the Sussex County Republican Women's Club began its many years of service to the community on the Federal, State, and local level. Today, I join the club in celebrating their 50th anniversary, and applaud the impact their organization has had on our State.

Revered and respected by their peers, these women have spent the last 50 years working to promote a diverse base of political activism in Sussex County. From the beginning, they focused on promoting the tradition of a two party system, encouraging civic participation in the county and throughout the state and educating voters about the Republican message of low taxes and individual empowerment.

They have been instrumental in electing Republican candidates in Delaware and maintaining a unified base for party activity in the state's most rural county. Through work on various campaigns, fundraisers and get-out-the-vote efforts, the Women's Club has always remained a strong advocate for both the needs of Sussex County citizens and the goals of the Republican Party.

I would like to acknowledge the dedication and resolve that the Sussex County Republican Women's Club has maintained over the last fifty years. Their continuous efforts to uphold the standards and integrity of the Republican Party are an asset to all Delawareans.

I would like to join my colleagues in congratulating the Sussex County Republican Women's Club on their 50th anniversary and to thank them for their immeasurable support and dedication.

HONORING JIMMIE RODGERS, THE FATHER OF COUNTRY MUSIC

HON. RONNIE SHOWS

OF MISSISSIPPI

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. SHOWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a favorite son of Mississippi who many call the "Father of Country Music." I speak of the Singing Brakemen and America's Blues Yodeler of Meridian, Mississippi, Jimmie Rodgers, who 75 years ago this year recorded his first country song. That first song sold over a million records the first year. He was a platinum artist before these singers today could even imagine such an accomplishment.

Sadly, Jimmie Rodgers contracted tuberculosis in 1920 and this young man would only live six years after recording this first song. But think of the profound influence he had on the world. He was the first artist inducted in the Country Music Hall of Fame and he is also in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. He recorded over 110 songs and literally recorded the last ones on his deathbed.

I want to address a side of this artist that few may know. In 1931 Jimmie Rodgers teamed up with Will Rogers and the two toured England and the South of the United States raising money and addressing the plight of the poor during the Depression Era. I appreciate those that will speak up for the farmers, and I feel today that rural areas too often are ignored. These two men were involved with Charitable Choice before that name was coined

This man was the Father of Country Music and, of him, it is said, "he started it all," and yet he took time to be concerned about those around him. It would have been easy to have used excuses such as his illness or his poverty or, once his hard work had produced great wealth, to simply ignore the problems of everyone else. But instead he gave of himself to help those around him. He was socially concerned with a "do something" attitude.

Jimmie Rodgers' life reflects the nature of the people I serve. They are hard-working people who care about one another and give of themselves to help each other. They are attracted to faith—Jimmie married a preacher's daughter, Caroline Williamson. It is no accident that so many singers come from Mississippi. It is the way we overcome our problems as we sing through them; it is the manner in which we celebrate life.

Jimmie died a young man of 36 on May 26, 1933, but on this Diamond Anniversary of Country Music we continue to celebrate his life and the many blessings he shared with us. I am proud to read this statement into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and will make sure a copy of this RECORD is placed in the Jimmie Rodgers Museum in Meridian, close to his gravesite.

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES H. MURPHY, JR.

HON. MARION BERRY

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor one of Arkansas's finest citizens, Charles H. Murphy, Jr. I am proud to recognize Mr. Murphy in the Congress for his invaluable contributions and service to his profession, his family, his State and this Nation.

Mr. Murphy was born in El Dorado, Arkansas on March 6, 1920, and became head of the Murphy family enterprise at the age of 21 after his father suffered a stroke in 1941. Mr. Murphy served in the armed forces for three years during World War II, and returned to El Dorado in 1946 to begin expanding the family business which was subsequently incorporated in 1950.

Under his leadership, Murphy Oil grew from a small oil and gas operation in southern Arkansas into a publicly-held, integrated oil company with international operations and scope. Mr. Murphy served as President of Murphy Oil from 1950 to 1972, Chairman and CEO from 1972 to 1986 and Chairman from 1986 to 1994. He retired from the board of directors in 2001 and was named director emeritus of the Company.

As a leader and spokesman for the oil industry, Mr. Murphy lectured widely in the United States and Europe where his audiences included OPEC oil ministers and the heads of national oil companies. He debated then-Senator Mondale on national television on the issues of price controls and divorcement in the oil industry. He also debated Lord Kearton, chairman of the British National Oil Corporation, on the role of national oil companies.

He served as chairman of the National Petroleum Council and as a director of the American Petroleum Institute where he also served as president of the 25 Year Club of the Petroleum Industry. For his work in bringing together oil industry leaders and national leaders of the environmental movement, Mr. Murphy was honored by both. He received the National Wildlife Federation's citation for outstanding individual service, and was a 1999 winner of the Chevron Conservation Award. In 1999, Mr. Murphy was one of the first honorees of the University of Arkansas School of Business Hall of Fame.

Educated in the public schools of Arkansas and by private tutors, Mr. Murphy received doctor of laws degrees from the University of Arkansas in 1966 and from Newfoundland Memorial University in 1995. Keenly interested in education issues, Mr. Murphy served 17 years on the Arkansas Board of Higher Education, 10 years as trustee of Hendrix College and established the Murphy Institute of Political Economy at Tulane University. He also served as a director of the Smithsonian Institution and was a trustee of the Ochsner Medical Institutions. He was a member of the Arkansas Business Council and served as chairman of its K-12 subcommittee.

The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette called him "a kind of one-man renaissance, a man of Arkansas and the Caribbean and the world." I couldn't agree more. Charles Murphy was my friend, and I forever will be honored by that friendship.

On behalf of the Congress, I extend sympathies to Mr. Murphy's family, and gratitude for all he did to make Arkansas and the world a better place.

TRIBUTE TO ANGELINA SOSAYA BIDDLE

HON. TOM UDALL

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. TOM UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, today I honor the memory of a delightful New Mexican, Angelina Sosaya Biddle, who recently passed away. All those who knew her will forever remember her fondly.

Angie was known as one of Santa Fe's most wonderful and lively characters. Angie was a common sight to many clothing stores and people along the Plaza and Acequia Madre Street. She loved to visit with store owners and discuss the latest fashions. Angie had worked with clothing designer Agnes James and at Suzette's at the La Fonda Hotel. While working for Agnes James, Angie designed the Buffalo Hunter shirt and the Bustle-Back broomstick skirt. Her sister, Stella Montoya, continues to still use the original patterns.

In her twenties, Angie enjoyed going out with the crew of the movie Santa Fe Trail. Her beauty was well known, and she was often used as a model by many of Santa Fe artists in the 1930's and 1940's. Angie enjoyed regaling her family with stories of when she and her cousin Fray Angelico Chavez were young, and would accompany her parents on the long drives to Albuquerque. She would tell how she and Fray Angelico often found it necessary to get out of the car and help to push it over La Bajada Hill.

Throughout her life Angie remained interested in fashions and kept that desire burning in her sisters and nieces. She always let her nieces know that they could wear pearls at anytime and with anything, and many of them still wear their pearls just that way. Angie had a love for anything French and had enjoyed her visits to France. The first time she traveled to Europe was with her mother aboard the Queen Mary. She was often seen at this French Pastry Shop at the La Fonda Hotel, where she loved to indulge in the crepes. She also loved to drive her "French" cars—her Renault and her beloved Peugeot.

While her nieces and nephews attended Acequia Madre elementary school, Angie would be a common sight, always stopping by to bring them treats and small gifts.

Born in 1910 to Augustin and Victoria Sosaya, she was preceded in death by her parents, her sisters, Mary, Consuelo, Delores, and Florence, her husband Martin Biddle, and her son Michael Biddle. She is survived by sisters Anita Nelson, of California, Stella Montoya and husband Eloy, Monica Sosaya Halford and husband Richard, of Santa Fe, and her brother Augustin Sosaya and wife Priscilla, of California. Numerous nieces and nephews also survive her.

Mr. Speaker, Angie will be missed not only by her family and many friends, but by her community as well.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE 2002 U.S. PHYSICS OLYMPIAD TEAM

HON. VERNON J. EHLERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to applaud the achievements of the members of the 2002 United States Physics Olympiad Team. The 24 young men and women who make up this team are remarkable and dedicated students with extraordinary talents.

Landing a spot on this prestigious team is extremely difficult. Initially, about 1,100 highly qualified students across the country are nominated by their high school teachers to take a national exam. The top 200 scorers on this test then advance to the next round of competition. Results from the second round of testing are used to select the 24 members of the team who then go on to attend an eight day intense training camp that features studying, testing and problem solving.

Members of the 2002 team include: Jared A. Bass, Peter S. Behroozi, Immanuel D. Buder, Steven J. Byrnes, Bryan G. Chen, Craig J. Fratrik, Daniel R. Gulotta, Chintan Hossain, Jennifer H. Hou, Joanna N. Huey, Patrick A. Hummel, Daniel M. Kane, Chen Li, Andrew M. Lutomirski, Sean P. Markan, Pavel G. Matrachenko, Paul J. Miller, Cristina Moldovan, Lydia W. Ng, Gregory N. Price, Emily R. Russell, Benjamin M. Schwartz, David W. Simmons-Duffin, and Albert Z. Wang.

Mr. Speaker, as a nuclear physicist, a former physics professor, and a strong proponent for math-science education, I have worked extremely hard to draw national attention to the need for and the importance of math-science education. After reading the accomplishments of the members of this team, I am proud to see students embrace the world of physics and the many challenges it presents. I am hopeful that the enthusiasm these students have shown toward learning more about physics will spread to other students. I personally want to thank all of the students who made an effort to become a part of this team for showing others that science is and can be fun. Mr Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting these future leaders of our country.

INTRODUCTION OF THE MAMMOGRAPHY QUALITY STANDARDS (MQSA) REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2002

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Mammography Quality Standards Reauthorization Act of 2002. This is a companion measure with my esteemed colleague, Senator MIKULSKI, who introduced an identical bill in the Senate yesterday. In 1992, Senator MIKULSKI and I introduced the original Mammography Quality Standards Act (MQSA). The primary objective of this law is to ensure that mammography is safe and reliable and that breast cancer is detected in its earliest, most treatable stages. The act was reauthorized in 1998 and now it is time for us to reauthorize it again.

We have a breast cancer epidemic in this country. An estimated 203,500 new invasive cases of breast cancer are expected to occur among women in the United States this year alone. Every 3 minutes a woman is diagnosed with breast cancer, and every 13 minutes a woman dies from this disease. This year in my home State of Michigan, about 6,500 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer, and the disease will kill 1,600.

Breast cancer is a progressive and systemic disease, in which our ability to treat and cure a small tumor is much greater than our ability to treat and cure a large tumor. For this reason, it is vital that we ensure the safety, accuracy, and accessibility of mammograms for all women. Our top health institutions, including the Department of Health and Human Services, the National Cancer Institute, and the Agency for Health Care Research and Quality, recommend screening mammography every one to two years for women ages 40 and over.

MQSA is a federal law that establishes a number of requirements aimed at strengthening and ensuring high quality standards for all mammography facilities. The MQSA program requires all mammography facilities in the United States to meet stringent quality standards, be accredited by a Food and Drug Administration-approved accreditation body, and be inspected annually. The 2002 reauthorization legislation continues all existing requirements.

It is simply not enough to have mammography screening facilities; we must demand and ensure that these facilities are responsible, reliable, and precise. MQSA requires that the FDA establish quality standards for mammography equipment, personnel, and practices. These standards apply to the following people at the facility: the technologist who takes the mammogram, the radiologist who studies the mammogram, and the medical physicist who tests the mammography equipment. All of these people must have special training and education, and must meet continuing education and experience requirements.

I urge all of my colleagues to support this important and beneficial bill which will help to ensure that women receive improved, accurate, and complete information with regard to their mammography screening. High quality mammography, while not a perfect tool, is currently the best available tool for the early detection of breast cancer and MQSA provides our best assurance of that quality.

IN HONOR OF ROBERT "BOB" SASSAMAN, WHO RETIRES AFTER 40 YEARS OF PUBLIC SERVICE WITH CALTRANS

HON. ADAM B. SCHIFF

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Robert W. "Bob" Sassaman, District Director for Caltrans District 7, who will celebrate his retirement from public service after an exemplary 40-year career at Caltrans.

Sassaman, an outstanding engineer and able administrator, was appointed as District Director on October 19, 1999, responsible for overseeing a vast and immensely complex transportation system in District 7, including 27 freeways and state highways spanning Los Angeles and Ventura counties. Sassaman, who had served as Chief Deputy for four years prior, had served as interim District Director since March of 1999 after Governor Gray Davis tapped then-District Director Tony Harris to serve as Caltrans Chief Deputy Director in Sacramento.

Prior to his tenure as Chief Deputy, Sassaman was Deputy District Director for Project Management at Caltrans District 8 in San Bernardino, a post he held since 1988. In that capacity, he was responsible for directing a professional engineering staff in the development, design and delivery of highway projects totaling in excess of $100 million a year. Sassaman was a member of a team that helped develop the project management concept at Caltrans, and later helped implement the system in District 8. The district was the first one in the state to use "single hat" project managers to streamline the process of delivering transportation improvements. He also was a facilitator at the project management academies that taught the system to Caltrans supervisors.

Among Sassaman's other career highlights are supervising the design of the complex Simi Valley/San Diego Freeway interchange—now named the Ronald Reagan Freeway 118/405—in the San Fernando Valley area of Los Angeles.

Sassaman was born in Neptune, NJ, but grew up in Phillipsburg, on the Pennsylvania border. He earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Civil Engineering from Lafayette College in Easton, PA, and a Master of Science degree in Civil Engineering from the University of Southern California. He also completed course work at California State University, Long Beach, and Mount San Antonio College in Walnut, CA, in business management. He holds a certificate in real estate from Mount San Antonio College.

Sassaman was hired at Caltrans District 7 as a junior civil engineer in July 1962; and held a variety of positions within the district over the next 26 years. They included Design Project Engineer of the 118/405 Freeway interchange; Resource Management Section Chief, Project Management Section Chief, Hydraulics Section Chief, Management Services Branch Chief; and Deputy District Director for Administration.

Sassaman is registered as a Professional Engineer in California (Civil), and is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers and the Project Management Institute.

There are few tasks as monumental in southern California as overseeing our regional freeway system with a commitment to responding to local needs and concerns, and for his dedication to better serving the commuting public of southern California as well as Caltrans employees, I ask all Members of Congress to join me in congratulating Bob Sassaman upon his retirement.

MENTAL HEALTH PARITY NOW

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, The National Mental Health Association's, NMHA, powerful vision for our country is to be a just, humane and healthy society in which all people are accorded respect, dignity and the opportunity to achieve their full potential free from stigma and prejudice.

Today, June 6, 2002, Americans are rallying on Capitol Hill to send Members of Congress a clear and unified message: Mental Health Parity Now! We must do more than simply hear what they are saying; we must persevere until we make it a legal reality.

Passage of a Mental Health Parity Bill would be a major step toward realizing the vision of the NMHA. Specifically, it is my hope that this Congress will pass the Mental Health Equitable Treatment Act of 2002, which will address the critical need of assuring that insurance coverage for physical ailments and mental ailments are comparable. Mental illness is real and widespread, but fortunately it is often very treatable and manageable.

Unfortunately, a parity amendment to the fiscal year 2002 spending bill for the Department of Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, which was passed by the Senate, failed in conference on a party-line vote. The amendment would have closed the loopholes of 1996 Mental Health Parity Act and given true parity to the American people. Instead, Congress extended the existing flawed mental health parity provision up until December 31, 2003. This leaves this important issue in pressing need of a resolution.

Over 54 million people in the United States experience some form of mental illness in their lifetime, but many go without the much-needed treatment a mental health professional could provide. In fact, almost half of the people of our nation with severe mental illness never seek or receive treatment. This in large part is due to stigma.

Throughout our nation's history, we have viewed mental illness with ignorance, fear and misunderstanding. We would not stand by while insurance companies put up barriers to cancer treatments, nor should we turn our backs on those suffering from mental health problems.

Many health insurers opposed to parity laws are concerned that overall health care costs will be significantly increased, due in part to the fact that treatment is sometimes more expensive and longer lasting than many physical ailments. However, access to mental health care often reduces medical claims for physical illness.

Recent studies show that full parity can be implemented without causing significant cost increases for managed care. In states that have enacted parity laws, many consumers use mental health care more efficiently. In the great state of Maryland, after a small rise of less than one percentage point in the first year of parity, mental health costs held steady in year two and declined in year three.

As millions of suffering Americans go without medical assistance, it costs the nation upwards of $150 billion each year. Vital human capital is lost and medical bills skyrocket as ailments worsen until even more expensive management is inevitable. The most damaging effect, however, is the pain and suffering that untreated individuals and their loved ones must endure.

The events and the aftermath of September 11 have exemplified the need to provide mental healthcare to all sectors of the population, including our youngest generation. Children, who are exposed to violent and threatening experiences, such as the September 11th attacks, may need special attention in order to heal emotionally.

If a child with a mental health problem is left untreated, the results can be devastating. Victims may repeatedly relive a traumatic event, which can cause anxiety and depression, impair concentration and learning and ultimately perpetuate a cycle of aggressive or violent behavior.

This vicious cycle can be lessened by strengthening families through programs and understanding, breaking down misconceptions of mental illness and providing people access to mental health professionals and vital treatment. All of these factors will help give millions of Americans the opportunity to recover and live healthy and productive lives.

I am proud that Congresswoman ROSA DELAURO and I were successful in securing $20 million in funding for fiscal year 2002 for the National Child Traumatic Stress Initiative, administered through the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Administration. Presently, we are working to secure an additional $50 million for fiscal year 2003 to continue this highly-regarded program.

I would like to commend the National Mental Health Association and the other organizations and individuals here today, who are pushing for mental health parity. This call for parity in the coverage of costs for mental and physical ailments through insurance programs merits our serious attention. Let us make their vision a reality in the 107th Congress.

HONORING PATRICIA BARELA RIVERA

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the District Director of the Small Business Administration, SBA, in Colorado, Patricia Barela Rivera.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., once said that the true measure of a person's character is how they handle themselves in times of adversity. By this gauge, Patricia Barela Rivera's character is worthy of our admiration.

Ms. Barela Rivera certainly knows a great deal about overcoming adversity, shrugging off disappointment and competing against unfavorable odds. She built a successful business in Colorado when Latina entrepreneurs were few and far between. She volunteered countless hours on behalf of minority non-profits, and eventually became the Director of the Governor's Advocate Corps in Colorado, where she swiftly built a reputation for inspirational management and was recognized as a leading voice on behalf of diversity in the Romer administration.

Tragically, just weeks ago, Ms. Rivera's condominium burned down just days before the SBA's biggest event of the year. Ms. Rivera lost her home and all of her possessions. This kind of blow would level many, but not Patricia Barela Rivera. She picked herself up, bought something to wear, attended the event and served gracefully as the Master of Ceremonies. That kind of dedication is worth our attention. At a time when many question the determination and quality of public servants, I find Ms. Barela Rivera's example inspiring.

Reflecting on the fire, she reasserted her belief that "everything happens for a reason and eventually shows itself to be something good". On her choice of attending the event in the midst of her personal chaos she said simply, "I had to be here. It's about strength. It's about surviving when we have devastation in our lives."

Particia Barela Rivera, or "PBR" as she is affectionately known to her friends, is clearly a dedicated public servant. She also is a remarkable human being. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Ms. Barela Rivera.

58TH ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 58th Anniversary of D-Day. It was June 6, 1944 when American and Allied forces landed on the beaches of Normandy, France, which began the continental campaign against Hitler's Nazi Germany. The 1st Infantry Division chaplain, Major Kovach, recently offered this prayer regarding the sacrifices American fighting men made on that effort some 58 years ago. The prayer is set out in text as follows:

> Almighty, eternal God, we bow before you during this solemn moment of remembrance. we find ourselves standing on hallowed ground... ground consecrated by the blood of those who have made the ultimate sacrifice for the cause of freedom, and their families gathered to honor the memory of their loved ones.
> 58 years ago, men of extraordinary courage fought for this very ground upon which we stand today. it is nearly impossible to conceive of the enormous price exacted to insure liberty's light would never grow dim. Only by the grace of God, the determined spirit of men like those memorialized here was freedom won and peace preserved.
> But keep us mindful Lord that freedom is not free. That it takes men and women of valor to win it, and a people committed to character and principle to keep it. May we stand firm to keep the peace others have given their lives to win and may it call us to a renewed appreciation for the liberty and opportunities which have been safeguarded by their sacrifice.
> As we walk by this memorial and countless graves, may we never again entertain thoughts of indifference or forgetfulness. May we pause and rededicate ourselves to the highest ideals our fallen comrades lived and died for. And, following their example, commit ourselves this day to the ultimate virtue of self-sacrifice in service to God, to country, and to our fellow man, that the memory of those who fought and died be properly preserved, and their lives not sacrificed in vain.
> In Your most holy name we pray. Amen.

IN SUPPORT OF PITTSBURGH'S TELEVISION STATIONS AND THEIR COMMITMENT TO THE FUTURE OF DIGITAL TELEVISION

HON. MICHAEL F. DOYLE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer support to the local Pittsburgh television stations in my district that are moving into the digital future. These stations: including WPXI, a Cox owned station, WTAE a Hearst-Argyle station, KDKA of CBS Television, and WPGH and WCWB which are both Sinclair Broadcasting Group stations have demonstrated a commitment to the future of free over-the-air television. By investing in digital television, they are preparing to offer their viewers—many of whom are my constituents—exciting services like High Definition TV, interactive television, datacasting, and expanded programming content.

The digital television transition is happening now, and I am proud that stations in Pittsburgh are leading the way.

Today, record players and cassettes have in many cases been replaced by CDs. Analog VCRs are being replaced by digital VCRs and DVD players. Similarly, consumers will soon be swapping their analog television sets for digital television sets. Of course for digital television to move into its next exciting next stage and fulfill its great promise, it will be important that all of these digital devices are capable of working together.

This concept—called interoperability—will enable a cable set-top box to be plugged into a digital VCR, which could in turn be plugged into a digital television set and all of the different devices will be able to communicate with each other. While there may be some discussion about the best way to achieve this end. It seems that everyone can agree that the final goal of interoperability will greatly benefit all consumers.

Like any new technology, the digital television transition can go only so far without the full support of the American consumer. Clearly, their support will increase significantly when these different devices work together easily enough for the average consumer to understand.

As we continue forward, let me reiterate: I am proud that Pittsburgh stations are leading the way in this exciting transition and I am confident that their investment in digital television will produce benefits for all consumers.

IN HONOR OF J. FRANK MOORE III

HON. MARTIN FROST

OF TEXAS

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of J. Frank Moore III, President of the International Association of Lions Clubs. Deeply involved in the community and sincerely committed to service, President Moore brings a unique passion and spirit to his duties, and truly lives the mission of Lions International: "We Serve."

Lions have a strong commitment to community service, and are recognized internationally for their service to the blind and visually impaired, as well as their commitment to helping youth throughout the world. An educator by profession and former Superintendent of Education for the Daleville, Alabama city schools, President Moore brings a wealth of experience as well as a unique perspective to the Association's service work.

A member of the Daleville Lions Club since 1975, President Moore has held many positions within the organization, and received numerous awards in recognition of his commitment and service to the organization and its mission. President Moore has won two Lion of the Year Awards, a 30 Member Key Award, the Henry W. Sweet Outstanding Past District Governor Award, two International President Leadership medals, seven International President's Award, and the Ambassador of Good Will Award, the highest honor the Association bestows upon its members.

In addition to his Lion activities, President Moore is active in numerous professional and community organizations. He is Chairman of the Daleville City Planning and Zoning Commission, a member of the Board of Directors of the Army Aviation Center Federal Credit Union and a member of the Army Aviation Museum Foundation executive committee. As you may be able to tell by now, President Moore is a busy man. More importantly, however, President Moore is a well-respected, hard-working, and dedicated individual.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Oak Cliff, Texas Lions Club myself, I have seen first-hand how tirelessly President Moore works on behalf of the International Association. I know my colleagues, many of them Lions themselves, will join me in honoring a remarkable man and a tireless advocate. I salute President Moore today, and wish him continued success in all of his endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO HELEN THORP STREET

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Helen Thorp Street, a citizen of Colorado. Helen died on May 6, 2002 and left a legacy of public service and dedication to the field of law and community leadership:

Helen was born in Marion, Kansas in 1912, and at nine years old, moved to Colorado when her widowed mother took up residence at the Brown Palace Hotel in Denver. These were adventurous times for Helen and she was inspired to branch out on her own and run away from home. Given streetcar fare by the hotel's bellman, she traveled for about an hour, had a change of heart and returned to the safety of her historic residence and its protective staff.

Helen graduated from The Kent School for Girls in 1929 and traveled east by train to study at Vassar College, where she received a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1932. She was also a student at the Sorbonne in Paris. She returned to Denver, and in 1936, began her legal studies at the Westminster College of Law at the University of Denver, above the Mapelli Meat Market, where she graduated with honors in 1939. She received the top score on the Colorado bar examination in 1940, but no firm in Colorado would hire her. Law was a man's profession and no one would give her a job.

In 1940, Helen joined the University of Denver's law school faculty, becoming the first woman in the United States to teach at an accredited law school. She represented indigent clients at the Legal Aid Society of Denver and after World War II, began a solo practice in the estates and trusts Field.

Helen married John Campbell Street, a West Point graduate and attorney from Alabama in 1942, and their daughter, Kimbrough Street Schneider, an estates and trusts attorney in Seattle, Washington, survives them.

For over 50 years, Helen was an active volunteer for many of Denver's charitable and civic entities. She served on the Board of the Legal Aid Society of Denver. She also served on the Board of the Community Chest, the predecessor of the United Way, was an active volunteer of the Margery Reed Mayo Nursery and helped reorganize the Denver Orphans' Home into the Denver Children's Home, serving on its board for six years.

Her longest and most significant association was with the Denver Symphony Association. She joined the Board in 1964, serving in many leadership roles. She became president and chairman of the Board from 1979–1982. One of her most significant symphony contributions was never known or recognized by the public. When the Symphony's founder, Helen Black was ready to retire, the orchestra did not have the money to give her a pension. Helen Street picked up the telephone and in one afternoon raised sufficient monies to fund Miss Black's pension.

Helen also served on the Board of the Children's Hospital, was active in the Central City Opera House Association and recorded law books for Recording for the Blind.

Among her many awards and honors for community service were the Distinguished Service Award conferred upon her by the Denver Rotary Club Foundation in 1983 and the Mary Lathrop Trailblazer Award in 1991 from the Colorado Woman's Bar Association. Never one to withhold her opinions, in her acceptance speech to the event's attendees, she was bluntly critical of lawyers and their emphasis on billing. "Your fees are much too high!" she told the Bar's members.

Colorado is a better place because of Helen Thorp Street. I applaud this remarkable woman and the legacy she has left our state, the practice of law and the example she set for community activists throughout our country. She will be missed by us all.

SALUTE TO THE DETROIT ARSENAL TANK PLANT

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the placement of an historical marker at a most significant site in Warren, Michigan. Especially now, as we reflect on our appreciation for our country's military strength and ability, it is fitting to mark the place in our community that has played a pivotal role in our military success in World War II and since. The Detroit Arsenal Tank Plant, dubbed the heart of the "Arsenal of Democracy," was an archetypical project that brought together government and business united in a joint cause to modernize the U.S. Army.

"Enough and On Time," was the motto for the tank plant since the first M3 tank rolled off the line on April 24, 1941. The Tank Plant lived up to that motto during World War II with its production of 22,234 tanks, closely matching that of Great Britain and Germany. During the first years of existence, the Detroit Arsenal Tank Plant became the center for coordinating the Army's wheeled vehicle supplies with the establishment of the Tank-Automotive Center.

The Tank-Automotive Center's function was to ensure that the Army's needs for wheeled and tracked vehicles and spare parts was met as quickly and as cheaply as possible. When first formed, the Center had a complement of forty officers and about six hundred civilians. By war's end that number had ballooned to five hundred officers and over four thousand civilians.

Since the end of World War II, and through the Korean, Vietnam, and Gulf Wars the Tank Plant evolved to meet the growing technological and functional needs of an ever-modernizing United States Army. In 1967, the Tank Plant became the Tank Automotive Command (TACOM). TACOM's reach now spreads over five states and eighty-one countries. The TACOM family manages and supports over 3,000 systems and 281,000 vehicles all over the world.

In 1992, the Department of Defense established the National Automotive Center, headquartered on the Tank Plant site. It serves as a conduit between the Army, industry, academia and federal agencies to share and develop technologies that have both commercial and military applications.

TACOM will continue to play this vital role for our nation's military, even as the site of the former tank plant assembly facility continues the transition to private use. The re-use of this property brings economic re-vitalization to the City of Warren and southeast Michigan.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in celebrating the remarkable history of the Detroit Arsenal Tank Plant, and saluting the workers and leadership, both past and present, who continue the most important mission of keeping our Army well prepared for any challenge.

REMEMBERING OUR D-DAY VETERANS

HON. SAXBY CHAMBLISS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the brave sailors and soldiers of D-Day. Fifty-eight years ago on this date young Americans joined by Allied forces undertook the most massive amphibious assault in the history of modern warfare, code-named "Operation Overlord". This direct assault on Hitler's Atlantic Wall was the first step in liberating occupied Europe.

Led by General Dwight David Eisenhower, more than 150,000 men along with thousands more providing air and artillery support invaded the beaches of Normandy and although suffering heavy casualties pressed on into the heart of occupied France.

We can only imagine what went through their minds as these brave men watched the gates open and they stepped into the cold Atlantic and onto those beaches. There were mortars' exploding all around them; sounds of bullets and planes flying overhead, but these men pressed on, while many around them fell and they helped secure the eventual Allied victory.

I am here today to pay tribute to those brave Americans, ones who came home and those who remain there, buried, overlooking the beaches. It was these men who answered the call of duty and saved liberty from the jaws of unspeakable evil.

Never had the world seen citizen soldiers come together and fight as brave and loyal as these men did. They left the comfort of home and were sent halfway around the world to preserve freedom, democracy, and liberty for the free world. These men showed the utmost courage in taking up the call of duty to defend freedom and for that our country is eternally grateful.

So today, as we confront a new tyranny in waging the war on terrorism, let these brave men be our model. I am honored to have the opportunity to commend them and I pray that we will never forget the sacrifices that these men put forth so that they and generations to come could live in freedom.

TRIBUTE TO ED CORYELL

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor a great American and a great labor leader, Ed Coryell.

A veteran of the Viet Nam war, Ed joined the Carpenters Union in 1967. He worked his way up from apprentice to the leadership of Local Union 8. After serving as Business Representative and Health and Welfare Board Trustee, he was elected President and Business Manager of the Metropolitan District Council of Carpenters of Philadelphia and Vicinity. He has also served as a Trustee of the Carpenters' International pension fund and serves as President of the Pennsylvania State Council of the union.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Coryell has not limited his activities to our union. He is also a member of the Boards of Philadelphia Independence Blue Cross and the Philadelphia Housing Authority. Our Governor appointed him to Team Pennsylvania, which is charged with bringing jobs to the Keystone state.

Ed Coryell built his union into a strong and united body of skilled craftsmen who have changed the skyline and the infrastructure of our city. Over the many contracts he negotiated, he won great improvement in the wages and benefit packages his 10,000 members enjoy. He established the finest training program for Carpenter apprentices and journeymen in the country. Because of Ed and others like him, Philadelphia's unofficial slogan is "if it's not built Union, it doesn't get built."

Mr. Speaker, the members and leadership of Unico will be honoring Ed Coryell for his years of service to his union, his city, his state and his nation. I join them in that honor. And I know that my colleagues stand with me as I salute my president, my mentor and my friend, Ed Coryell.

TRIBUTE TO SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE CARLOS CAZARES

HON. BRAD SHERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. BOB FILNER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleague, Representative BOB FILNER, to mourn the passing and recognize the contributions to the legal profession and the community of Superior Court Judge Carlos Cazares.

The oldest of 11 children who came from a hard-working Mexican family, Judge Cazares distinguished himself as a trailblazer serving in the Army during the Korean War and later attending college at night through the GI Bill, earning an accounting degree. He subsequently earned a law degree, becoming one of the first Mexican-American lawyers in San Diego County.

In 1972, then-Governor Ronald Reagan appointed him to a Municipal Court judgeship. Five years later, Gov. Jerry Brown elevated him to the San Diego Superior Court, an event witnessed by his parents, Carlos and Norberta Cazares.

In addition to his accomplishments on the bench, Judge Cazares was instrumental in ensuring that people have the highest quality of care and respect, both personally and professionally. For example, he helped establish the San Ysidro Health Clinic and was a member of the Knights of Columbus and a lay minister at St. Rose of Lima Catholic Church, ministering to the sick at hospitals.

He was a dedicated son, father, grandfather, brother and uncle.

Mr. Speaker, Judge Carlos Cazares was a hard-working community leader. It is our great pleasure to recognize his selfless commitment to the betterment of our community and our fellow citizens. We urge our colleagues to join in honoring his achievements. He has truly served our society with relentless dedication, and his community contributions distinguish him as an example for us all.

CENTRAL NEW JERSEY HONORS REVEREND RICHARD MILLER

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize, honor and thank Reverend Richard Miller, Pastor of The Stanton Reformed Church in Stanton, New Jersey since 1965, and dedicated community leader.

In a span covering four decades Reverend Miller has provided more than religious services. He has long been a dependable and reliable listener, who has always taken a personal and heartfelt interest in all of the community.

In fact Reverend Miller and the Stanton Reformed Church provide an example of what a community church should be. Ten years ago, when a member of the community was diagnosed with leukemia, Reverend Miller opened the doors and initiated a bone marrow drive. The program was subsequently supported by Merck & Co and has resulted in several matches.

This is but one example, however, of the many lives he touched. Reverend Miller has also served as the Chaplain to the Hunterdon County Jail and the Readington Township PBA. Furthermore, he has served as a role model to our youth as both an Assistant Scoutmaster and Scoutmaster of the Boy Scouts of America since 1969. The Stanton Grange recognized this distinguished service in 1975 with a Community Service Award.

It is with great pride that I join the members of the Reform Church in recognizing the thirty-seven years of service that Mr. Miller has given to the people of Stanton. He has been the ear that listens, the shoulder to lean on and the modest individual who gave all he had to his community. Reverend Miller is truly a treasure in New Jersey's cultural heritage. His example is an inspiration to all Central New Jerseyans.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, again, I rise to celebrate and honor this true New Jersey treasure. I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Reverend Richard Miller of the Reformed Church in Stanton, New Jersey.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION ANTITERRORISM ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. PETER A. DeFAZIO

OF OREGON

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to express support for H.R. 3983, the Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Act. I also want to mention a couple of areas where the bill needs to be improved during Conference Committee consideration. According to the Economist magazine, last October, a discovery at the southern Italian port of Gioia Tauro shook the foundations on which world trade has grown so rapidly in the past half century. A suspected al-Qaeda terrorist was found inside a container. The Egyptian suspect, who later disappeared while on bail, was equipped in comfort for the duration of the container's intended sea voyage from Italy to Halifax in Canada. He carried plans of airports, an aviation mechanic's certificate and security passes. Intelligence sources say other containers similarly outfitted were found at the Italian port.

Had this container actually reached an American or even Canadian port, this suspect would likely have escaped into the interior of the United States. Why? Because many terminal operators have abandoned the practice of inspecting so-called empty containers to ensure that the container is actually empty. They have also abandoned the practice of inspecting container seals, to ensure that no tampering of the container has taken place. It is time for Congress to step in and demand that every terminal operator do their part to enhance the security of American ports, containers, and our communities.

The International Longshore and Warehouse Union testified before the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and made a compelling case for legislation to mandate security checks of containers. Port workers can inspect the outside seal of every container moving through our ports. A broken seal would alert the port facility that the container has been tampered with and that it needs to be carefully inspected before entering a facility or being placed on a vessel. A systematic check of container seals also provides authorities with a record of the parties responsible for placing the seal on any container that may contain a terrorist or contain the means of a terrorist act.

Another equally necessary security measure is the mandatory inspection of so-called empty containers, which regularly move on and off ships each day. Many countries, including Japan, require such inspections because of the increased risk that these "empties" pose for the placement of bombs, weapons and contraband. In fact, inspection of empty containers on American docks was the customary practice up until a few years ago when companies decided it cut into profits. We can no longer allow our port facility operators to place profits over the security needs of our country.

H.R. 3983 is a good bill, but it is weak on container security solutions. I hope that provisions providing for security checks of empty containers and the integrity of container seals are considered by the Conference Committee.

A TRIBUTE TO PASTOR ED JOHNSON OF FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF ROSEMOUNT, MINNESOTA, FOR 35 YEARS OF INSPIRING MINISTRY AND DEDICATED SERVICE

HON. JIM RAMSTAD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Pastor Ed Johnson, Senior Pastor of First Baptist Church of Rosemount, Minnesota, who will soon become Pastor Emeritus.

Pastor Ed and his loving wife, Ellie, have been doing the Lord's work in our state and nation for 35 years and have truly made a difference in the lives of thousands of people.

Pastor Ed has been a special friend and spiritual mentor since the day we first met in the spring of 1990—over 12 years ago. From my first major vote on "Operation Desert Storm" to coping with my mother's Alzheimer's disease, Pastor Ed has been there for my family and me. His wise counsel, friendship, support and prayers are deeply appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, many of our colleagues remember Pastor Ed Johnson from his service as Guest Chaplain for the House of Representatives several years ago, when he made a lasting impression on all of us.

That's Pastor Ed—always serving the Lord in a loving, kind and gentle way. Whether he's motivating young missionaries on the mission field, encouraging young preachers, supporting Sunday school teachers and bus drivers, counseling families, teaching new members and students or reaching out to the community to build a growing flock for his remarkable church, Pastor Ed has been there for all of us the past 35 years.

Pastor Ed has been repeatedly recognized by local, state and national religious organizations for the phenomenal growth of his church and his many other accomplishments. It's easy to understand his success once you meet him.

Pastor Ed Johnson's First Baptist Church has been successful because of its family-oriented approach centered firmly on the Bible. No one escapes the reach of Pastor Ed's inspiring motivational tools: a warm heart, an unyielding resolve and an eloquent speaking style.

Pastor Ed's dynamic approach to building faith is based on what he learned at Tennessee Temple University and Temple Baptist Theological Seminary in Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Mr. Speaker, Pastor Ed doesn't just encourage people to come to church, he goes out and gets them! He has assembled an armada of buses to go out into a 15-mile radius from Rosemount and bring people to his church and Sunday school. Then he sends the members of his congregation out into the world to spread the gospel and do good works to help people in need.

Under Pastor Ed's visionary leadership, First Baptist Church of Rosemount has developed a missionary program that oversees 46 missionaries in countries throughout the world, 7 Christian schools and colleges and numerous full-time Christian ministries right here in the U.S.

Also, Pastor Ed founded the First Baptist Church Christian School in 1971. Today, that school has produced 400 graduates, many of whom have entered the ministry full time throughout the world, as well as many other callings.

Pastor Ed has been recognized for his accomplishments time and again, and he has been honored with Doctor of Divinity Degrees from Hyles-Anderson College and Baptist Christian University.

A past President of the Minnesota Association of Christian Schools, Pastor Ed is now that group's Executive Director. He also serves as a member of the Board of Directors of both the American Association of Christian Schools and the General Council of Baptist Mid-Missions.

In these positions, he has traveled throughout the nation in recent years, spreading faith with an evangelistic and Biblical conference ministry.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Pastor Ed Johnson has made a difference in politics and government both in Minnesota and our nation. From our work together in the Minnesota Legislature to save the option of home-schooling for Minnesota families to my very first and most challenging endorsing convention for Congress, Pastor Ed has been a key ally and loyal friend. I treasure his wise counsel and consider his friendship a true blessing.

Mr. Speaker, as Pastor Ed Johnson retires from his active ministry, we wish him and his wonderful wife, Ellie, all of God's blessings and thank him for the great impact his ministry has had on countless people in Minnesota and around the world.

May God bless you, Pastor Ed and Ellie, and may God bless America!

CONGRATULATIONS TO BELLEFONTE AREA HIGH SCHOOL MOCK TRIAL TEAM ON WINNING THEIR DISTRICT CHAMPIONSHIP

HON. JOHN E. PETERSON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge the accomplishments of a dedicated group of young students from Bellefonte Area High School in Bellefonte, Pennsylvania. I wish to pay tribute to those students on the Mock Trial team and their advisors who participated in the Mock Trial program sponsored by the Pennsylvania Bar Association. This is the second year in a row that Bellefonte Area High School Mock Trial team has won the competition against other student teams in their district.

The Mock Trial program gives young students an opportunity to learn about the law, legal strategies, and courtroom etiquette and procedure. This is accomplished by "trying" a fictitious court case in front of an actual judge and jury. Student participants portray both the witnesses and the attorneys on both sides of the case. Members of the Bellefonte Area High School Mock Trial team were Erika Dillon, Karen Stringer, Jeremy Winn, Alex Henderson, Katey Glunt, Jon Judiech, Tim Williams, Sara Waugh, Justin Kirk Houser, and Joe Putnam. Their advisors were Ed Fitzgerald, Gregg Kohlhepp, and Assistant District Attorney Lance Marshall, who donated his free time to help these dedicated students.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing the Bellefonte Area High School Mock Trial team who brought deserved recognition to their school and community. Their enthusiasm and desire to learn the judicial system should be commended and encouraged by all. Their success demonstrates that today's youth are our leaders of tomorrow.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE TOWN OF FREEDOM

HON. MARK GREEN

OF WISCONSIN

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. GREEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, today before this House I recognize and honor the Town of Freedom, a Wisconsin community that exemplifies the American dream in its past, present and future.

On June 5, Freedom celebrates the 150th anniversary of its founding.

Freedom has a rich history. Its first inhabitants were Indians that called the area Sagola, which means "good morning." Some of Freedom's first settlers were James Jackson, an ex-slave, and his Native American wife. In recognition of his release from slavery, Jackson named the place "Freedom" In the years that followed, the demand for lumber from northeastern Wisconsin brought a number of Irish, German and Dutch immigrants to Freedom.

In 1848, Wisconsin gained statehood, putting Freedom one step closer to its formal foundation. In June of 1852, Ethan Powers, Albert Cook, and James Taylor met for the first time as the town's Board of Supervisors, marking Freedom's beginning that we celebrate this year.

Throughout the 19th Century, Freedom continued to build and prosper, growing along with the area's burgeoning timber industry. As the 20th Century arrived, and agriculture began to replace logging, the citizens of Freedom also began to change with the times. Like its Indian name, Sagola, meaning "good morning," today the citizens of Freedom have woken to the glory of a new day and continue to march forward toward a bright future ahead.

On this sesquicentennial anniversary of the inception of Freedom, I offer my congratulations to the town and its residents. Since its founding, Freedom has lived true to its name, welcoming every newcomer and providing all with the liberty and independence to prosper.

A TRIBUTE TO JIM AND MISTY JOHNSON OF LAVACA, ARKANSAS

HON. MIKE ROSS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with a heavy heart to pay tribute to a young woman and colleague of mine, a pharmacy technician from Lavaca, Arkansas, along with her husband, Jim, and three-year-old daughter, Shea Nicole, who lost their lives in the Interstate 40 bridge collapse on May 26, 2002.

Misty Johnson was only 28 when she was so tragically killed, but in those 28 years she brightened the lives of friends, family, even her customers at Rose Drug Store in Paris, Arkansas. Her coworkers say Misty was fun to work with, always on time, and always ready to work hard.

Six years ago, she married Jim, her high school sweetheart. Their friends say no one can remember either of them having dated anyone but each other. Jim worked as a route sales representative for Wonder Bread, and started work at 3 am. He had to go to bed earlier than the rest of his family, and he made sure he kissed his daughter Shea every night before doing so. The two lived for their young daughter and always put her first in their lives. In fact, they were headed to Tulsa for a day at the zoo when their lives were unexpectedly taken.

My heart goes out to Misty's and Jim's parents, Hursel and Linda Henson and Juanita Brown Johnson, and their families. I know this is an extremely difficult time for them, and for all families who lost loved ones on that terrible day, and I keep them in my thoughts and prayers. While Misty, Jim, and Shea are no longer with us, their spirit lives on, in the lives of all those they touched.

COMMENDING STATIONS ON MAKING THE TRANSITION TO DIGITAL TELEVISION

HON. CHRISTOPHER JOHN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. JOHN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my support for the ongoing efforts by our Nation's broadcasters to make the transition to digital television. This exciting new technology will open the door to a new world of possibilities like High Definition TV, interactive television, and expanded programming options.

I am proud that one of the broadcasters in my congressional district has taken a lead in making this advancement. KLFY, a Young Broadcasting station, currently serves residents in Louisiana's Seventh Congressional District with a digital signal.

It is no small accomplishment to make the transition to digital. Broadcasters across the country are making substantial investments in new transmitting facilities, new production equipment, and in some cases new broadcast towers. Collectively, the broadcast industry has invested over a billion dollars into this new technology.

America's broadcasters have demonstrated their commitment to making the DTV transition, but they cannot do it alone. A collaborative effort by the FCC, cable operators, consumer equipment manufacturers and Congress is needed if we are to meet the timetable that has been established. Several issues must still be addressed to build on the progress that broadcasters are making in rolling out digital television to their viewers. In particular, we must work to overcome the economic and technical roadblocks that are currently preventing small broadcasters from successfully launching DTV.

Mr. Speaker, with the continued efforts of our Nation's broadcasters I am sure that we will overcome these obstacles and make a successful transition to DTV. I remain confident that the future of television is digital and I believe that future is bright.

EXPATRIATE LEGISLATION

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to prevent tax avoidance through the device of renouncing one's allegiance to this country.

Citizenship in this country confers extraordinary benefits. Our citizens are able to enjoy the full range of political and economic freedoms that our government ensures. With the benefits of citizenship comes the responsibility to contribute to the common good. Avoiding that responsibility through renouncing citizenship should not be tolerated.

This country is fortunate in that it can depend on the voluntary compliance of its citizens to collect its taxes. In that respect, we are unique in the world. The willingness of our citizens to continue voluntarily to comply with our tax laws is threatened when very wealthy individuals can avoid their responsibility as citizens by turning their backs on this country and walking away with enormous wealth.

I reject any suggestion that my bill is a form of class warfare or motivated by class envy. It is true that my bill will affect only very wealthy individuals. Only very wealthy individuals have the resources necessary to live securely outside the borders of this country as expatriates. Closing a loophole that only the extraordinarily wealthy can utilize is not class warfare. It is a matter of fundamental fairness to the rest of our citizens.

Opponents of effective reform in this area have gone so far as to suggest that those reforms would be inconsistent with our Nation's historic commitment to human rights. I strongly disagree. The individuals affected by the bill are not renouncing their American citizenship because of any fundamental disagreement with our political or economic system. These individuals simply refuse to contribute to the common good in a country where the political and economic system has benefitted them enormously. Some opponents have gone so far as to compare the plight of these wealthy expatriates to the plight of the persecuted Jews attempting to flee Russia. That argument is worthy of contempt. Our bill imposes no barrier to departure. Indeed, most expatriates have physically departed from this country before they renounce their citizenship.

For reasons that continue to puzzle me, there was a bitter partisan dispute in 1995 over this issue. The partisan nature of that debate obscured the fact that there was a genuine bipartisan consensus that tax avoidance by renouncing one's American citizenship should not be tolerated.

The dispute during 1995 involved an argument over the appropriate mechanism to be used to address tax-motivated expatriation. The Clinton Administration, the Senate on a bipartisan basis, and the House Democrats all supported legislation that would have imposed an immediate tax on the unrealized appreciation in the value of the expatriate's assets. The House Republicans supported a provision that imposed a tax on the U.S. source income of the expatriate for the 10-year period following expatriation. Armed with revenue estimates from the Joint Committee on Taxation that showed their version as raising more money, the House Republicans prevailed and, in 1996, enacted their version of the expatriation legislation.

There was an article in Forbes Magazine several years ago that summarized the effect of the 1996 legislation as follows: "It ain't workin." Although the law appears to be draconian on its fact, there are plenty of loopholes. In the first quarter of 1999 alone, a grandson of J. Paul Getty; a son of the shipping magnate Jacob Stoll-Nielsen; and Joseph

J. Bogdanovich, the son of the Star-Kist mogul, took advantage of those loopholes. The article suggests that many other expatriates deliberately have lost citizenship without formally renouncing it, believing that was a simple way to avoid the 1996 Act.

The 1996 legislation made several modifications to ineffective prior law expatriation provisions. It eliminated the requirement to show a tax-avoidance motive in most cases and eliminated one simple method of avoiding the rules, involving transfers of U.S. assets to foreign corporations. There were many other ways of avoiding those rules such as delaying gains, monetizing assets without recognition of gains, and investing indirectly through derivatives. Those techniques were left untouched.

The 1996 legislation made no serious attempt to prevent the avoidance of the estate and gift taxes, even though expatriation has been described as the ultimate technique in avoiding estate and gift taxes. Bill Gates, one of the wealthiest individuals in the world, has approximately $90 billion in assets. If he were to die or transfer those assets to his children by gift, the potential liability would be substantial. If Bill Gates were to expatriate, he could immediately make unlimited gifts in cash to his children without any gift tax liability. If he expatriated ten years before he died, his entire $90 billion stake in Microsoft could be transferred to his heirs with no income tax or estate tax ever being imposed on that accumulation of wealth.

Following is a brief summary of my bill.

SUMMARY OF BILL

The bill would impose a tax on the unrealized appreciation in the value of an expatriate's assets. The amount of that tax would be determined as if the expatriate has sold his assets for their fair market value on the date that he expatriates. To the extent that those assets are capital assets, the preferential capital gains tax rate would apply.

The bill exempts the first $600,000 ($1.2 million for a married couple) of appreciation from the tax. It also exempts U.S. real property interests and interests in retirement plans.

The expatriate would be provided an election to defer the tax with interest until the property is sold.

The bill would eliminate the ability to avoid estate and gift taxes through expatriation by imposing a tax on the receipt by U.S. citizens of gifts or bequests from expatriates. The new tax would not apply in circumstances where the gift or bequest was otherwise subject to U.S. estate or gift taxes. In addition, the new tax would be reduced by any foreign estate or gift tax paid on the gift or bequest.

The bill would eliminate the ability to expatriate on an informal basis. It would require a formal renunciation of citizenship before an individual could avoid tax as a U.S. citizen.

Generally, the bill would apply to individuals formally renouncing their citizenship after the date of action by the Committee on Ways and Means. The provisions designed to prevent avoidance of estate and gift taxes would apply to gifts and bequests received after such date.

CONGRATULATIONS TO KANSAS CITY'S DIGITAL BROADCASTERS

HON. KAREN McCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the broadcasting business is unique in that it provides its service for free. Most communication mediums, like high-speed Internet, satellite TV, and cable require a subscription. But anyone willing to purchase a TV set and rabbit ears can enjoy local TV.

Three stations in my district have already invested to see that this tradition continues into the digital era. I would like to thank Hearst-Argyle stations KMBC, ABC, and KCWE, UPN, for their recent conversion to digital broadcasting on April 30, 2002, and again praise KCPT, Kansas City's public television station which has been broadcasting a digital signal since November 9, 1998. Actions speak louder than words, and these stations, through their actions, have demonstrated a commitment to the future of free, over the air television. KMBC, KCWE, and KCPT should be commended for making digital television broadcasts available to homes in Missouri's Fifth District.

I look forward to the ongoing transition to digital television, and I commend my local stations for leading the way. Let me offer my thanks and congratulations to them for flipping the digital switch.

HONORING THE WOMEN VETERANS OF AMERICA

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my deepest gratitude to the millions of our women who have donned the uniform of our armed forces and served proudly in the every military conflict in which this Nation has engaged. On Saturday, May 18, I spent some time with a group of ladies of whom we should all be extremely proud. I was honored to take part in the Harrisburg Armed Services Day celebration of Women Veterans organized by City Councilwoman Patricia L. Stringer and local veteran Barbara Lewis. I could not commend the women veterans attending that gathering enough then and cannot do so now. Nevertheless, it is only fitting that we should attempt to honor those who have sacrificed so much for our benefit.

The roughly 2 million women who have served with the military have served in every conflict since the American Revolution. Over 55,000 of these veterans have come from my home, the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. All have left a legacy of service, duty and patriotism. We would do well to remember their devotion to country, and to imitate their heroic sense of responsibility, especially as we find ourselves confronted with new enemies and a new war.

On Saturday, May 18, I spoke with veterans such as Sandra Mosten and Betty Curtis, a former WAC corporal, who served in the Army at a time coincident with my service in the early 1950s. Sandra and Betty served our country proudly, and perhaps without realizing it, have blazed a path for women who have come after them. Indeed, 90,000 women serve in the U.S. Armed Forces today, and all have been strengthened in their commitment to the military by the examples of the strong women who have gone before them—veterans like Sandra Mosten and Betty Curtis.

Mr. Speaker, the history of women in uniform moves me each time I recount their great accomplishments. The Army Nurses Corps, founded in 1901, served as the vanguard unit for official participation of uniformed women within the military. The Navy and Marine Corps soon followed suit and enlisted women into a variety of roles during World War I. By World War II, 400,000 women served in noncombatant military positions. Many of us will remember the Women's Army Corps organized by Oveta Culp Hobby, the first lady of Texas and, later, the first Secretary of Housing and Education. The WACs, as they were fondly dubbed, were joined by the Navy's WAVES, the Coast Guard's SPARS and Air Corp's WASPs. Their jobs may have been labeled noncombatant, the risk was often just as great as those faced by men in the front lines. For example, 87 military nurses fell into enemy hands as POWs during the war.

I personally remember the WACs and WASPs of Central Pennsylvania who instilled in the youth of the community a renewed sense of duty—a sensibility I carried with me, into my adulthood and which propelled me forward during my time in the Army during the Korean War. In fact, the years just prior to my enlistment were critical to the future of women in the military. In 1948, President Truman signed into law the Women's Armed Services Integration Act of 1948. The Act granted women permanent status in the Regular and Reserve forces of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and newly created Air Force. Over 500 women then served in the combat zones of Korea. When America entered that long conflict in Vietnam, women again were an integral part of military operations. Nearly 7,500 women served their country honorably during that conflict. Following their example, President Ford signed into law an Act admitting women into the service academies of the various military services. The WAC formally dissolved a few years later, marking in many ways the full integration of women into the military, free of segregated units. We only need to view the heroic exploits of women in Desert Storm and Afghanistan to see how far women have come in the military. I need look no further than the confines of my Congressional District.

I am reminded of the new traditions of women's military service that are being created each and every day when I look at the Headquarters of our Pennsylvania National Guard, located at Fort Indiantown Gap near Annville, Pennsylvania. There, the first woman to attain the rank of General in the Pennsylvania Guard commands the Army Guard with devotion and professionalism. I had the great honor of noting Deputy Adjutant General Jessica Wright's promotion to Brigadier General in this body last Congress. Let me also note the tremendous accomplishment of a young soldier I met just a few months ago, Krista Griffith of Hershey, Pennsylvania. Krista has recently become the first woman to attain the rank of Sergeant Major in the Pennsylvania Guard. Old enlisted veterans like myself will note that Sergeant Major is one of the noncommissioned officers (NCO) in the Army. Sergeant Major Griffith, an intelligence specialist, will soon serve 6 months in Bosnia as part of the SFOR operations the 28th Infantry Division of the Pennsylvania Guard will soon undertake.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to know General Wright, Sergeant Major Griffith, Sandra Mosten, Betty Curtis, Barbara Lewis and so many other women veterans from Central Pennsylvania. We as a country should be honored to remember the 2 million women veterans who have served this country and the thousands who serve in uniform today during this time of war. We will never forget their sacrifices or their commitment to service. I thank them all on behalf of the people of my district. I know my colleagues will join me in thanking them on behalf of a grateful Nation.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, earlier today, I was unavoidably detained and missed a vote on a motion to adjourn. Had I voted, I would have voted "no" on this vote—No. 213.

IN RECOGNITION OF MR. FREDERICK J. STOKLEY

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of an outstanding individual who has demonstrated a true commitment to education, Mr. Frederick J. Stokley, C.E.O. and Superintendent of Schools in Ridgewood, NJ. Tomorrow, on June 7, 2002, the Ridgewood community will celebrate Mr. Stokley's 15 years of service to the Village of Ridgewood. Amid fireworks, plays, and tributes to Mr. Stokley, the community will thank him for his dedication. The results of his work are felt not only in the public schools of Ridgewood, but throughout our community. He is a wonderful example of the type of person who makes Bergen County such a wonderful place.

The Ridgewood school district is considered to be one of the premiere suburban school districts in the New York metropolitan area, and indeed the entire State of New Jersey. Much of this is because of the guidance of Mr. Stokley as Superintendent. The experience that he brought to the job has continued the strong tradition of excellence in Ridgewood's education system. When Mr. Stokley joined Ridgewood in 1987, he had already served as Superintendent of Schools in Massachusetts and Louisiana. Additionally, Mr. Stokley has taught at outstanding institutions such as Harvard University, Cambridge College, and Boston College. Ridgewood was lucky to have a man of such intelligence, experience, and devotion join its fine school system.

As a former member of the Ridgewood Board of Education and former educator, I can tell you first hand the importance of leadership and serious commitment to the public school system. And I believe, as the residents of Ridgewood will agree, Mr. Stokley has provided those very qualities for our community. I applaud his dedication and his service in the past 15 years in our community. And I wish him all the best for the years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Mr. Stokley on his 15 very successful years with the Ridgewood Public Schools and thank him for his fine example for all of us committed to providing a quality education for our children.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF HOWARD EISENBERG

HON. THOMAS M. BARRETT

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the City of Milwaukee lost one of its most brilliant and compassionate citizens on Tuesday when Howard Eisenberg died of complications of a heart attack.

Dean of the Marquette University School of Law since 1995, Mr. Eisenberg symbolized the humanity and dedication to public service toward which all lawyers and jurists should strive. Hailed by members of the legal community across the country, Mr. Eisenberg earned praise for his efforts to give everyone access to the justice system. In Milwaukee, he owned a well-deserved reputation for offering help to those in need, giving advice to those who asked, and taking on pro bono cases on behalf of those with limited financial means.

Even Mr. Eisenberg's hobbies and leisure time activities reflected his drive to help those in need. He was, after all, a lifelong fan of the Chicago Cubs.

Mr. Eisenberg was as groundbreaking as he was compassionate. He served as Wisconsin's chief public defender from 1972 to 1978, and in that role he wrote the state's public defender statute. Eisenberg, who was Jewish, also became the first non-Catholic dean of the Marquette Law School when he assumed the post at the Jesuit institution seven years ago.

Leaders from across the state sought out his special combination of legal prowess and commitment to the community on a range of issues. Mr. Eisenberg headed a community commission for the Archdiocese of Milwaukee that examined the Church's response to alleged sex abuse in the clergy, and Governor Scott McCallum selected Mr. Eisenberg to co-chair Wisconsin's Task Force on Ethics Reform in Government.

A member of the Bar in Wisconsin, Illinois and the District of Columbia, Mr. Eisenberg, a graduate of the University of Wisconsin—Madison School of Law, argued more than 300 appellate cases before state and federal courts, including two cases before the U.S. Supreme Court. He was widely recognized as a leader in the areas of criminal procedure, legal ethics, elder law, and civil rights.

I ask my colleagues in the House today to honor and recognize the illustrious career of Howard Eisenberg. His integrity, character, and legal expertise will be sorely missed.

RECOGNITION OF DAVE ZWEIFEL'S 40TH ANNIVERSARY WITH CAPITAL TIMES

HON. TAMMY BALDWIN

OF WISCONSIN

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Dave Zweifel's 40th anniversary working at the Capital Times newspaper in Madison, WI. Dave grew up in New Glarus, WI, and entered the University of Wisconsin in 1958. The day after Dave graduated with his degree in journalism, he went to work at the Capital Times. Except for 2 years serving his country in the U.S. Army as a field artillery officer, Dave has dedicated his journalism career to the Capital Times.

But the 40th anniversary of Dave at the Capital Times is only part of the story. Dave's story is much more than that. It is the story of a young boy having a dream and seeking out that dream through relentless dedication and hard work. As a boy growing up in the New Glarus area, Dave dreamed of becoming the editor of the Capital Times. As a high school student and the editor of a local paper, Dave went to meet with the editor of the Capital Times. That editor promised Dave that if he continued his hard work, and got a college education, he would have a job waiting for him at the Capital Times. Several years later, Dave showed up at the editor's door, diploma in hand, and the editor gave Dave that much sought after job as a cub reporter.

Dave worked his way up at the Capital Times as a reporter covering everything from agricultural issues to the political beat. In 1971 Dave's hard work paid off when he landed the city editor slot. Further dedication was rewarded when he became managing editor in 1978 and editor in 1983.

Dave's dedication to his newspaper is evident in every edition of the Capital Times. Everyday at 4:30 a.m. Dave arrives at his desk to go over that afternoon's paper and to ensure that the paper embodies the unique ideals of Wisconsin's Progressive movement.

In today's world of mega-media mergers it is refreshing to know that everyday, Dave Zweifel works to ensure that the Capital Times remains true not just to the ideals of journalism, but true to Wisconsin, the traditions of the Badger State, and the independent voice that Wisconsinites have depended upon since 1917.

TRIBUTE TO DR. BARBARA HELLER

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, on June 20, 2002, Maryland elected officials, University officials, faculty, staff, students, alumni and friends will honor Dr. Barbara Heller for her many years of visionary leadership as Dean of the University of Maryland School of Nursing. After 12 years, Dr. Heller is leaving to accept a position as the first Executive Director of the newly formed Center for Health Workforce Development. She will also assume new responsibilities as the School of Nursing's first Rauschenbach Distinguished Professor, an endowment professorship dedicated to the improvement of nursing and nursing education.

During her tenure as Dean, Dr. Heller is credited with building a new state-of-art nursing school building to support the School's research, teaching and service mission. Another key milestone in Dr. Heller's tenure is the recruitment of nationally known nurse researchers and scientists, resulting in a 900% increase in grants and contact awards for the School of Nursing since 1990.

As Dean, Dr. Heller has guided the School of Nursing through many challenges, not the least of which is the national nursing shortage. With aggressive strategies of outreach, increased scholarship support, marketing and student recruitment, Dr. Heller's term has been marked by significant increases in enrollment and diversity. The School's minority student population has more than doubled in the past dozen years, from 15% to 35%.

U.S. News and World Report has consistently ranked the School among the top ten in the nation, and in 2000, accorded the same status to five of the School's graduate specialties. Recently, the School was designated a Pan American Health Organization/World Health Organization Collaborating Center for Nursing in Mental Health Promotion, significantly expanding opportunities for international research and dialogue for faculty and students.

Dr. Heller's leadership in service to the community also deserves special notice. During her tenure, a new model of clinical instruction and health care service has expanded to include five Wellmobiles, 14 school-based wellness centers, a high-school based family support center, the Open Gates Health Center, and the Pediatric Ambulatory Care Center. The latter is managed and operated jointly by the Schools of Nursing and Medicine, providing primary care services to more than 400 children each week who would not otherwise have access to adequate health care.

Due in great measure to Dr. Heller's leadership, expertise, knowledge and determination, the University of Maryland School of Nursing is well positioned to meet the challenges of the future. It has been a great privilege to work with Dr. Heller. I wish to congratulate her on her successful tenure as Dean and extend best wishes to her in her new position.

65TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF THE OVERPASS

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember not only those men and women who fought courageously and gave their lives to preserve the freedoms of our country, but also to remember the men and women who fought and gave their lives in the struggle for the rights of working men and women in America.

On May 27 we observed the 65th anniversary of an important and historic moment in the American Labor movement, the Battle of the Overpass. It was on May 26, 1937 that Walter Reuther, President of United Automobile Workers Local 174 and three fellow UAW organizers—Richard Frankensteen, J.J. Kennedy and Robert Kantor—organized what they hoped would be a peaceful distribution of union literature by the ladies' auxiliary of Local 174. At Reuther's request, several neutral observers were also present, including members of the clergy, reporters and photographers. At the suggestion of one of these photographers, they climbed the steps to an overpass leading to Gate No. 4, the primary entrance to the Ford Motor Company's River Rouge industrial complex.

Within minutes, Ford's "Servicemen" attacked them brutally, eventually throwing them down the two flights of iron steps leading up to the overpass. Dozens of the union's members were injured and one member died as a result of his injuries.

The Battle of the Overpass galvanized the organizing efforts among Ford employees, and the photographs taken that day brought national attention to not only the demands of working men and women, but also to the tactics employed by management to crush the early unions. It was a turning point for the labor movement. Ford had won the battle in the street, but ultimately lost in the minds of the public. In just a few short years, Ford officially recognized the UAW and signed its first contract with the union.

The right to safe working conditions, the eight-hour workday, the weekend . . . these are things that the men and women at the Battle of the Overpass fought, bled and even risked their lives for—and we should never forget that. Today, labor unions continue to negotiate for livable wages, decent health benefits, and ways to improve the quality of products and services they provide. They are striving to achieve fairer treatment for workers of color, working women, workers with disabilities and gay and lesbian workers, both on the job and in society. They continue to champion support for a strong public education system, along with the right of all children to receive quality education and opportunities for learning throughout adulthood. Unions continue to be on the front lines of promoting democracy across the globe.

It is right that we remember those that fought so hard for that first contract 65 years ago, and draw strength from their perseverance, so that 65 years from now our children will look back and see the great progress made by current generations.

INTRODUCTION OF THE SAFE SLEEPWEAR AND BURN PREVENTION ACT OF 2002

HON. JOHN SHIMKUS

OF ILLINOIS

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleague, Representative ED TOWNS, in introducing the "Safe Sleepwear and Burn Prevention Act of 2002." This legislation is important to thousands of children and their parents who face the dangers of sleepwear-related fires every day.

This legislation accomplishes three things. First, it repeals an ill-advised exception to our children's fire safety regulations created by the Consumer Product Safety Commission in 1996. This exception completely exempted sleepwear for infants age 0–9 months from the fire safety requirements. Second, the legislation repeals a similar regulatory exemption created for so-called "tight-fitting" sleepwear. Finally, our bill closes an egregious loophole in current law, which allows manufacturers of garments used by children to sleep in to avoid all fire safety requirements simply by labeling the garment as "daywear" rather than "sleepwear."

We owe a debt of gratitude to the Shriners Hospitals for Children for bringing this situation to our attention. Following the CPSC's 1996 decision, doctors at the Shriners Hospitals, which treat over 20 percent of all serious pediatric burn injuries in the United States, began to notice an alarming increase in the number of children suffering from sleepwear-related burn injuries. In the two years following the Commission's decision, the Shriners documented an alarming 157 percent increase in the number of children with fire-related injuries.

Last Congress, our subcommittee on Commerce, Trade and Consumer Protection held a hearing on this issue and received testimony from the Shriners and the American Burn Association, which represents all the Nation's burn centers and burn health care professionals. The evidence is compelling, and Congress must act quickly to ensure a burn-safe environment for children.

This legislation will reverse the Commission's ill-considered relaxation of the fire safety regulations and require that all garments used with regularity as sleepwear by children age 0–7 years must meet fire safety requirements. Mislabeling a garment as daywear or claiming that it is not intended to be used as sleepwear will no longer be an excuse for not meeting fire safety requirements, especially for the youngest and most vulnerable of our children.

We are also fortunate that we now have the technology available to create such a fire-safe environment for just pennies per garment. These new technologies are inexpensive, safe, do not wash out and do not alter the texture of the garment. We simply have no excuse for not ensuring that all garments used as sleepwear take advantage of this new technology.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will truly create a safer environment for children. We can prevent thousands of horrific burn injuries and lessen the severity of those that do occur by adopting this legislation. The agency charged with protecting our children has failed in its duty to do so, and now Congress must act.

TRIBUTE TO GUADALUPE S. RAMIREZ

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the memory of Guadalupe S. Ramirez for whom Los Angeles Mission College recently dedicated a new Collaborative Studies Building. Guadalupe was an outstanding community activist who died in January of 2000 at the age of 84.

Born in El Paso, Texas, Guadalupe had to end her formal education in the seventh grade to care for her ill mother. Soon after her mother passed away, Guadalupe relocated to California in the 1930's. She later married Manuel C. Ramirez. The couple partnered in many community efforts and they worked together to establish the San Fernando Valley chapter of the League of United Latin American Citizens. Even with their deep involvement in the community, the Ramirez's dedicated themselves to family, raising and caring for more than 35 children, including their many foster children. Guadalupe's many accomplishments involved helping found both the first Head Start childcare program in the Valley, and the Chicano Studies Department at Cal State University, Northridge. She also helped develop the North Valley Occupational Center.

In the 1970s Guadalupe led the campaign to place a proposed community college in the northeast San Fernando Valley. Her tireless effort proved successful, and in 1975 Mission College was founded in San Fernando. Dubbed as "the mother of Mission College" for her efforts on behalf of the community and the college, Guadalupe is remembered and loved by the greater Northeast San Fernando Valley community. The dedication of the Collaborative Studies Building in Guadalupe's name serves to acknowledge her role in bringing an institution of higher learning to the northeast San Fernando Valley while at the same time advancing the goals and values she held so dear.

Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to ask my colleagues to Join me in saluting Guadalupe S. Ramirez, whose life is an inspiration to all.

TRAFICANT TRIAL: A RAILROAD OF JUSTICE

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the government presented a ten-count indictment against me on May 4, 2001. And convicted me on those ten counts, Thursday, April 11, 2002.

Count Two—David Sugar.

David Sugar was indicted for backdating invoices for his company, some of which concerned me and Mr. Sugar ended up getting caught up in making false statements about these invoices.

To avoid perjury, Mr. Sugar stated he was pressured into doing quid pro quo favors at the Traficant farm.

Be advised that David Sugar testified that he received $1,400 in one payment and accepted a Steinway piano, appraised for between $6,000 and $7,000 and claimed the same on his tax records.

In my trial, the judge did not permit the testimony, or consensual taped phone call with Harry Manganaro, friend of David Sugar, in whom Sugar confided after being visited by the FBI for a second time. Clearly under the circumstances, Mr. Sugar's discussion with Mr. Manganaro should have fallen under the hearsay rule and been permitted as evidence.

On Sunday, January 27, 2002 I had the following conversation with Harry Manganaro regarding Mr. Sugar's situation:

JT: This is what, the twenty-seventh? Sunday, January twenty seventh? Okay now, Harry do you want to spell you last name?

HM: M-A-N-G-A-N-A-R-O.

JT: Manganaro. Yea. We've known each other for a lot of years, but you work for Dave Sugar right? You used to?

HM: I used to.

JT: And on or about the time that Dave ah, has gone through this ordeal with me, you were his employee?

HM: Yea, when I was there I was just a consultant on demolitions.

JT: Yea, you wanna move a little closer? And you realize we are taping this conversation?

HM: Yes.

JT: Okay. Ah, in fact, you mentioned, there, you came to me yesterday to my house at about what, 10:00? This is the first you divulged that information to me.

HM: Right.

JT: Okay. And you realize I represent myself, I'm my own attorney.

HM: I do.

JT: Now, I've asked you to meet me here today and you told me that basically Dave Sugar had made statements to you relative to this case. I want you to just in short, brief terms tell me what Dave Sugar said.

HM: Well first of all, he had people coming in, they came in two times.

JT: Who were the people?

HM: That was the FBI people. I don't know exact names.

JT: That's fine.

HM: The first time they came in they were questioning what he did for ah, you and (sounds like transport machinery) and ah, they didn't charge you for it. And Dave is bad on keeping some records and things like that. There was stuff on my desk where I didn't even bill people yet, but I got the bills. And he probably had your bill on there too. And they were aware of that, basically they left that time. Then they came back when Dave wasn't there and they went through the whole office, and ah (unintelligible).

JT: Well, what they did to him was they charged him with some offense involving me, quite frankly I'm not even up to date on his offense, but then at some point he said to you that he had to make statements.

HM: Right, basically they told him that if he doesn't cooperate with them, he was going to get his wife involved and ah, his son involved with the business and everything like that so, he didn't want anybody else to get involved with business or he pleaded guilty, he doesn't want to get his wife involved and have problems. They gave him the opportunity.

JT: Who is they again?

HM: They is the FBI.

JT: Now, did ah,.

HM: I know one thing, he has been nervous ever since then cause they've got the threat of going to jail over his head and ah.

JT: If he don't do what?

HM: If he doesn't cooperate.

JT: Did he tell you that, well what did he tell you, did he tell you he broke the law with me, what was the statements to you?

HM: Basically he don't feel that he broke the law because ah, your dad and his dad were friends for years and years. And he thought he was helping a friend but he did say that whatever he did for you, he was paid because he had gotten some money, I'm not sure of an exact amount, I don't know fourteen, eighteen hundred dollars, something like that, plus a piano that's worth more than what these people are saying.

JT: Well, he mentioned to you that it was an eighteen fifty-six Steinway that was registered in the book?

HM: Right, I moved it out of your house.

JT: Yea, and it was registered in the book only two made in eighteen fifty-six, but there was other antiques too. Did you help move those things from the barn and from the house?

HM: Yes I did, you had them in the barn, we went to the barn, we got stuff up in the attic.

JT: There were several other antique pieces that he had taken, but basically all he did there, was he laid, you guys spread the concrete, he did not have anything to do with paying for the concrete.

HM: No, he didn't buy the concrete. The concrete was bought by a guy in Struthers, I believe it was.

JT: T.C. Ready Mix delivered it. And ah, I paid T.C. Ready Mix and he had nothing to do with paying that. But the point I'm making is, did he say look, I had to lie or they were going to put me in jail, bring my son involved.

HM: Yep.

JT: Tell me exactly what he said.

HM: That's what he said. What your saying is that he was deathly afraid that they were going to bring his son in, his wife in, and ah, if he didn't cooperate with them, he was going to go to jail.

JT: And by cooperating, what does that mean?

HM: Well by cooperating, right now he is not in jail.

JT: Yea, by telling them . . .

HM: Whatever they want to hear, he had to tell them. And at this point, he is still worried about going to jail, because if he doesn't cooperate in the courthouse he has got that threat lingering over his head about going to jail.

JT: When did he tell you this, do you recall?

HM: Oh, it had to be after the second meeting with the FBI. I can't give you a specific date, but it was right after that. It was actually before he went to jail on ah, another offense, I think they had something with his old DUI.

JT: Against the father? Dave senior?

HM: Dave senior, yea he had one.

JT: Yea he had one too.

HM: And they pushed that issue.

JT: They were pushing that. But they indicted him on, was supposedly he backdated a bill to me and he supposedly said he didn't backdate the bill, and then they found that he did backdate a bill or whatever the hell it was and they were going to get him for perjury, that was technically the count so, is that what you recall?

HM: Right, but the bill, as I said before, Dave was bad, he'll do work for other, and he even explained to the FBI people that he has done work for New Middletown and different things like that, and he'll forget to send a bill, or he'll have it out but he won't put a date on it and it might be a month later that he'll decide to put a date on it to send it for when he did the work. And it's backdated, but on the same token, ah, a lot of times its just forgetfulness.

JT: But ah, evidentally Dave was concerned cause he knew they were after me so, he said that he didn't backdate the bill right?

HM: Right. Correct.

JT: And that was the technicality that got him indicted.

HM: Right that was just...

JT: Bull sh—?

HM: Him protecting an old friend, that's what it, amounts to. Myself, for the petty little thing that he did, I don't think that . . .

JT: But he said to you that he felt bad that he had to do this, because it wasn't truthful, and he and I did nothing illegal, is that in fact what he said?

HM: That's it. Because the point is that you know, he can't figure out why he can't help people and still get some money for it, which he did, and ah, get in trouble for doing something he didn't do.

JT: There were no intentions to do something for me because I was doing something or helping him.

HM: Right.

JT: That's exactly what he said?

HM: That's about the extent of it. And ever since then he has been really worried.

JT: I know he feels bad. Everybody is saying you can see he don't want to do what they are forcing him to do. But he is forced to this, is that what he told you?

HM: That's it.

JT: And were he not being forced with these technicalities, he would tell the truth in Cleveland, wouldn't he?

HM: Yea he would.

JT: And he's still real worried that he may tell the truth and if he does, they are going to send him to jail, don't they?

HM: That's the problem right now that Dave has. If he tells the truth, he goes to jail, if he lies about it he goes to jail. He's caught in a nutshell and he don't know which way to go.

JT: He has to go the way they want him though, don't he?

HM: You got that right.

JT: But he told you that explicitly?

HM: Yes he did.

JT: And you are willing to testify to that?

HM: Yes I will.

JT: Thank you Harry, I think today is Sunday, January, what's the date, the twenty-seventh?

HM: The twenty-seventh I think.

JT: Is there anything else you want to say Harry?

HM: Ah, not really, unless you want to hear about that ah...

JT: About the city of Youngstown and their deals they had going, no. That's something that, I got an investigation going on and I may go over that with you at some point, but right now, I'm more concerned about his case here and what they have done with witnesses.

HM: One more about Dave, you know that he doesn't need any trouble.

JT: He certainly doesn't need any trouble, is that what you said?

HM: No he's a very good guy, hard worker at times, and he's still a good guy.

JT I know that.

HM: I Don't believe that by him supposedly talking to you about out of town people at one time for a job, could justify all the problems that he has coming.

JT: Yea, and he in fact was right the rightful bidder. And there was some hanky panky in the city wasn't there?

HM: There definitely was.

JT: And he told it to me didn't he?

HM: Yes he did.

JT: And I looked into it.

HM: Yes you did, and there was nothing promised, anywhere along the line.

JT: And as soon as I looked into it, they changed the whole ball game down there didn't they?

HM: Right. They got some out of town firm that went bankrupt.

JT: The out of town firm did go bankrupt didn't they?

HM: Yea they did, I went to the auction.

JT: Well thank you Harry, I appreciate you coming to me by your own volition.

HM: Yes I did.

JT: Thank you and this is Sunday, January twenty seventh, approximately Eight fifty-five a.m., is that the time you got? Eight fifty-five a.m., alright.

There are also contract issues relative to Sugar and the city of Youngstown, in which the government maintained that I leveraged the City to give Sugar the contract.

I did try to help Sugar get that contract. There was no quid pro quo. David Sugar and his company pay more than $100,000 in taxes into Mahoning County, where the city of Youngstown is located. And, because the need for employment in my district, I always support good quality bids from local companies, which hire my constituents and pays taxes into this community. The contract was eventually awarded to a company from Buffalo, New York for a difference of $14,000.

The poor quality of the company that was granted the bid for the City is evidenced by it's bankruptcy auction, in which Harry Manganaro attended at the request of David Sugar. Additionally, the company's performance created a fire at the work site causing damage after smoldering for a lengthy period of time.

Did I help David Sugar? Answer—Yes. I helped thousands of my constituents in similar situations and David Sugar was paid for any services he may have provided at the Traficant farm.

The sugar count has been manipulated so much it's more like NutraSweet©.

Next week . . . Pinocchio, Attorney at Law.

A TRIBUTE TO CALIFORNIA STATE ASSEMBLY SPEAKER PRO TEM FRED KEELEY

HON. SAM FARR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor my friend, California State Assembly Speaker pro Tem Fred Keeley. In his years of service to the communities of the Central Coast and throughout California, he has earned a reputation for professionalism, and the ability to fairly balance competing interests and find common ground between them. His legacy of tireless work has been an inspiration to me, his colleagues in the California State Assembly, and many others.

Fred Keeley holds an unwavering conviction that Californians need, and deserve, a clean and well-protected environment, and that it is not necessary to threaten or damage the environment to meet the energy needs of Californians. Fred has been a strong advocate of energy conservation and efficiency programs, in addition to developing programs to encourage households to generate their own electricity with renewable energy. In March 2000, Fred's bond measure, Proposition 12, the Safe Neighborhood Parks, Clean Water, Clean Air, and Coastal Protection Bond Act was passed. In drafting the Marine Life Management Act, Fred brought together sport and commercial fishermen, environmentalists, and scientists to address the question of how to be good stewards of our ocean resources.

Fred Keeley understands that the greatest of all of California's resources are its people, and that state, federal, and local governments should do all they can to invest in these people by investing in their education. The Central Coast is home to excellent institutions of higher education, many of which have formed partnerships with the research facilities located around the Monterey Bay. One of the ways Fred is helping college students and their communities is by addressing the need for student housing. Fred also works on behalf of younger students through his efforts to create a high school in Watsonville, and on behalf of our youngest students, through his efforts, to improve availability of funding for the Healthy Start program.

Term limits will force Fred Keeley to leave the California State Assembly, and his talent and vision will be sorely missed. However, I know that he will continue an active contributor to the communities of Central Coast, as he did in his years as a Member of the Santa Cruz County Board of Supervisors, and as my Chief of Staff when I served in the California State Assembly. I am proud to call Fred Keeley a friend, and happy to honor him for his commitment to public service.

HONORING SUSAN PETERS

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend Susan Peters as she retires from over 37 years of educating children of elementary grade levels one through three. Susan has taught at Neil Armstrong Elementary School in Diamond Bar, California for 30 years and has been in the Pomona Unified School District for 33 years. She has even had the rare opportunity to teach the children of former students. Formerly, her first four years were in the State of Michigan.

In her years at Neil Armstrong, she took the lead role in organizing the school library and bringing it into the 21st century. Susan, with her team teacher Toby Kahan, has instituted the AR reading program and set it up on computers for the entire school. She has always been available to serve on many different committees, both school and district-wide. Susan holds a Masters Degree in Education specializing in reading.

Susan's departure will be a great loss to her school and to the children she teaches. She has stated that from the time she was a small child she knew that she was to be a teacher, and she succeeded in that dream. This is a great and very dedicated educator whom I congratulate for her years of outstanding commitment to our children as she goes into retirement.

HONORING REVEREND DR. ZAN WESLEY HOLMES, JR.

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the career of one of Texas' most beloved and honored spiritual leaders, the Reverend Dr. Zan Wesley Holmes, Jr., who retires this month as Senior Pastor of St. Luke "Community" Methodist Church in Dallas. Reverend Holmes has been a friend and spiritual mentor to me—and to so many others in the world—throughout his decades of service to our community. This evening he is being honored for his extraordinary service with an Official Tribute orchestrated by the friends and family members he has touched over the years.

Reverend Holmes is a man of unshakable faith, great wisdom, and bountiful kindness. He has been a pillar of the Dallas community for more than 45 years, working tirelessly to stabilize and mobilize our neighborhoods and improve the quality of life for all North Texans. By giving of himself so generously, he has helped to strengthen our families and our spiritual faith, promoted justice and equality, and helped create economic opportunities that has made Dallas a more diverse city to live.

First and foremost, Reverend Holmes has been a spiritual beacon for the Dallas community. As a young man attending Huston-Tillotson College, he accepted his calling to the ministry and embarked on a path that has uplifted so many of us over the years. In 1956, Reverend Holmes moved to Dallas to attend Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Theology. He became a professor in the same department in 1974, inspiring generations of ministers since that time.

Throughout his pastoral career, Reverend Holmes has achieved many milestones. He helped found Hamilton Park United Methodist Church in Dallas. In 1968, Reverend Holmes rose to District Superintendent in the West Texas Conference of the United Methodist Conference when segregation called for a separate African-American governing body of the United Methodist Church. After the Methodist Conference integrated in 1970, Reverend Holmes' term as District Superintendent carried over into the unified conference and he proudly served on behalf of people of faith of all colors.

Shortly thereafter, Reverend Holmes was appointed Minister of St. Luke Methodist Church in East Dallas. He came at a time when the church only had 50 members, and through his leadership, the congregation has grown to more than 5,000 members. He brought to St. Luke the desire to build a city-wide congregation that embodied a strong commitment to community outreach. After his installation as pastor, the word "Community" was added to the church's name at his insistence. In keeping with this sense of community, Reverend Holmes has brought many of his seminary students to St. Luke for their pastoral internship, making it a training ground for many well-known pastors who preach around the world today.

Beyond his work in the pulpit, Reverend Holmes has been a tireless leader in the fight for fairness and equality in the Dallas-Ft. Worth Metroplex. While becoming one of Dallas' true visionaries, his work has helped to strengthen the voices and representation of African-Americans, as well as Hispanic Americans in many sectors of our community.

When I first considered running for the Texas House of Representatives in 1972, Reverend Holmes stood by my side and encouraged me. His wise counsel helped me to make the decision to run in that first election, which launched my 30-year legislative career. Throughout my career, I have been privileged to rely on Reverend Holmes for support and advice as well as for his friendship.

He has also played a pivotal role in bringing up other Texas African-Americans into elected office, and has met the call to office himself. Reverend Holmes worked on the campaign for the first elected African-American Texas State Representative Joseph Lockridge. After Representative Lockridge was killed in an airplane crash, Reverend Holmes was asked to fill his unexpired term. Reverend Holmes then ran for election and served two full two-year terms as a Texas State Representative. As an elected official, Reverend Holmes fought to create single-member districts, which ensured that African American and Hispanic voters would have more representation. Many, many other African American political leaders have ascended to public service from his guidance and teaching.

On any given day, hundreds of people in the Metroplex leave their homes to participate in programs spearheaded by Reverend Holmes. Believing that the church must be involved in the education of our youth, Reverend Zan Holmes and his late wife of 43 years, Dorothy, created the Zan W. Holmes, Jr. Scholarship Program, which has raised more than half a million dollars to help send deserving young people to college. At the end of each grading period, Reverend Holmes has reviewed the report cards of the children in his congregation. One by one, students have lined up outside his office to speak to Reverend Holmes about their grades and the challenges they are facing. These are the kind of personal touches that we have come to know from Reverend Holmes—and one of the great qualities we will dearly miss.

Mr. Speaker, for all of these accomplishments, and for so many others that are too numerous to list here, I am proud to rise in honor of Reverend Dr. Zan Wesley Holmes, Jr. and to express my gratitude for his many years of selfless public service. He is truly a role model and leader in our global community, and though we will miss hearing his words of wisdom and faith coming from the pulpit each Sunday, we congratulate Reverend Holmes as he moves on to new spiritual journeys.

TRIBUTE TO DR. CHARLES W. ESTUS, SR.

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a dedicated educator and sociologist, Dr. Charles W. Estus, Sr., who has recently retired from his position as Director of the University Transportation Center at Assumption College.

Dr. Estus has had a long and distinguished career in academia. He has taught sociology since 1962, and he has spent 34 of those 40 years teaching at Assumption College where he was named Professor Emeritus in 2000. He has written on many subjects including the sociology of religion and the history of Swedish-Americans. Along with his study of Swedish-Americans, Dr. Estus sits on the Board of Directors of the Swedish-American Historical Society.

In addition to a long career in the classroom, Dr. Estus also worked to promote education through Assumption College's University Transportation Center, serving as its founding director. Created under the Transportation Equity Act in 1999, the Center's mission is to develop an understanding of the relationship between transportation and the environment. The affects of transportation on the environment are becoming increasingly clear in the 2lst century, and Dr. Estus deserves praise for helping to bring this message to his community.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the entire House of Representatives joins me in congratulating Dr. Estus for his work as an educator and wishes him the best of luck in retirement.

A SALUTE TO MAIMONIDES HEBREW DAY SCHOOL OF THE CAPITAL DISTRICT AND MRS. HOPE GOLDMAN BERGER NATHAN

HON. MICHAEL R. McNULTY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. McNULTY. Mr Speaker, Monday, June 10th is the 22nd Anniversary of the Maimonides Hebrew Day School in my congressional district in Albany, New York. This year's recipient of the Dr. Morton Berger Memorial Award is Mrs. Hope Goldman Berger Nathan.

On Monday, the Maimonides Hebrew Day School of the Capital District, an exemplary pre-K through 12 educational institution affiliated with Torah Umesorah National Association of Hebrew Day Schools, will hold its Annual Scholarship Dinner marking 22 years of outstanding Orthodox Jewish education with outstanding secular education for Jewish youth of the Capital Region.

The School is named after Moses Maimonides, a sage rabbi, teacher, and physician who created the first comprehensive code of Jewish law—and serves a role model for excellence.

In this age of unprecedented challenges, especially in the wake of the catastrophic attacks upon our nation on September 11, 2001, our young people need the optimal moral, religious, and secular education to prepare them for a challenging future.

As part of the Maimonides Dinner, Hope Goldman Berger Nathan will be presented with the Doctor Morton Berger Memorial Award. This award was established in loving memory of her husband, Doctor Berger (of blessed memory), in recognition of his outstanding leadership on behalf of Jewish education and Jewish communal life in the Capital Region and New York State, until his untimely death as a crime victim of a drunk driver.

Since arriving in Albany with Doctor Berger over 42 years ago, Hope Goldman Berger Nathan has raised three wonderful children, Linda, Howard and Allen—who themselves have excelled in Jewish and secular education and community service.

Mrs. Nathan has rendered invaluable service to Jewish education and communal life including but not limited to Maimonides Hebrew Day School of the Capital District, The Hebrew Academy of the Capital District, the "Vaad Hakashruth" (Board of Kosher dietary laws), Congregation Shomray Torah, Congregation Beth Abraham Jacob, Temple Israel and its Camp Givah, and Congregation Beth Emeth.

Mrs. Hope Goldman Berger Nathan, with her beloved husband, Tom Nathan, continues to play an active role in community service.

I also proudly extend my highest regard to Maimonides School President Yisroel Bindell, the School's Rosh Yeshiva, the esteemed Rabbi Israel Rubin, and all of the administrators, staff, teachers and students, and offer them my best wishes for continued success.

A TRIBUTE TO ROBERT S. HARGRAVES

HON. MIKE ROSS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Robert "Bobby" Hargraves, a distinguished Arkansan, attorney, and life-long Democrat who died on June 1st at the young age of 55.

Bobby's notable career in law began after he graduated from the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville in 1973. He then moved to Hot Springs with his wife, Joanie, to begin a 29-year law practice. In those 29 years, he has served as an Arkansas Bar Examiner and has twice served as a Special Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court, in addition to serving as a special Circuit Judge and Chancery Judge.

But Bobby did much more for his community than uphold and defend the law; he was an exemplary citizen who cared a great deal for children, and he focused much of his work to better their lives and their futures. He served as Garland County's first Juvenile Referee and President of the Arkansas Juvenile Judges Association. He established the juvenile justice program in Hot Springs, and he founded the Ouachita Children's Center dedicated to providing emergency shelter and support services for abused, neglected, and troubled youth.

Bobby was an avid gardener and outdoorsman, a devoted family man and member of the Episcopal Church, and a pillar in the Hot Springs community. He was a close, personal friend of President Bill Clinton.

I know this is a difficult time for Bobby's wife, Joanie, their sons, Lucas and Jacob, his mother, Jean, his brother and two sisters, and all of his many friends and relatives whom he loved dearly. I am keeping all of them in my thoughts and prayers.

While Bobby Hargraves may no longer be with us, his spirit and his legacy live on in the many lives of those he touched.

TRIBUTE TO RUBIN AND SHARON PIKUS

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I stand today to recognize the outstanding service of Rubin and Sharon Pikus. They are exemplary members of the community, devoting much of their time to numerous volunteer organizations.

I would also like to recognize the accomplishments and service of their daughters, Andrea Hirsch and Marcy Katz, and their sons-in-law, Charles Hirsch and Jeff Katz.

The Nassau County Coalition Against Domestic Violence is honoring these exceptional individuals for their service to the community.

Sharon Pikus first became involved with the Coalition Against Domestic Violence while she co-chaired the Commission for Women's Equality of American Jewish Congress. The Commission helped countless women and children on Long Island by educating the community about the plight of abuse victims.

Rubin Pikus has been an activist in housing related issues on Long Island. He is also a Board Member of the Nassau County Coalition Against Domestic Violence. His involvement has brought a wealth of business and housing knowledge to the organization.

Charles and Andrea Hirsch, in addition to their duties as the parents of two children, commit time, energy, and resources to the Coalition.

Jeff and Marcy Katz, the proud parents of Miles Katz, have successfully balanced their personal and professional lives with involvement in the community.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Rubin and Sharon Pikus for their life-long service to their community. I also commend Charles and Andrea Hirsch and Jeff and Marcy Katz for ensuring the continuity of this unselfish commitment to the betterment of others.

D-DAY VETERANS

HON. JOHN B. SHADEGG

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. SHADEGG. Mr. Speaker, on this, the 58th Anniversary of D-Day, I address the House to honor six heroic Arizonans.

This past Monday I had the pleasure of awarding Don Benford, Joe Cicchinelli, Archie Dixon, Frank Kirinich, Mike Mills and Richard Thim the "Jubilee of Liberty" medal and a certificate of thanks from the French government for their outstanding bravery, valor and extraordinary service to the liberation of France.

Fifty-eight years ago they stepped to the doors of their C–47 transports and jumped into the dark, menacing embrace of the Normandy night. Fifty-eight years ago, the ramps of their landing crafts hit the pounding surf at Omaha and Utah beaches and they leapt forth into the teeth of terrible storm.

They were the elite of the American Army and Air Corps. They were the pride of our entire nation. They were what Tom Brokaw later came to call our "Greatest Generation."

As these gentlemen spearheaded the Allied invasion of France on that fateful summer night 58 years ago, they were taking an incredible leap of courage.

Steven Spielberg has said that his depiction of D-Day in Saving Private Ryan actually underplayed the ferociousness of the battle. That gives some measure of the superhuman heroism and valor of our D-Day vets.

It is no exaggeration to say they saved the world. And it is even less of an exaggeration to say they saved democracy for my generation—and future generations.

In his history of D-Day, Stephen Ambrose points out that Hitler thought that democracies were too weak to fight fascism, and that American soldiers—raised to believe in freedom and liberty—were soft and no match for his master race. But America's soldiers of democracy—you and millions of other World War II veterans—were anything but soft. The Taliban, by the way, are learning the same lesson about today's GIs.

These six Arizonans were able to storm the beaches of Normandy and win World War II precisely because they were fighting for liberty and freedom. They are the heart and soul of America.

In some ways, modern society is very different from the nation that the men and women of D-Day knew, and it is sometimes fashionable to take a cynical view of the world. But when the calendar reads the 6th of June, such opinions are better left unspoken. No one who has heard and read about the events of D-Day could possibly remain a cynic.

Army Private Andy Rooney was there to survey the aftermath. A lifetime later he would write, "If you think the world is selfish and rotten, go to the cemetery at Colleville overlooking Omaha Beach. See what one group of men did for another on D-Day, June 6, 1944."

Mr. Speaker, I remain eternally grateful to all of the veterans who stormed the beaches at Normandy in the defense of freedom. Every American soldier who courageously fought for freedom deserves recognition and thanks from this Congress.

ATTACK ON THE U.S.S. "LIBERTY"

HON. CYNTHIA A. McKINNEY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Ms. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I speak to commemorate and recognize the tragic attack that took place against the U.S.S. Liberty on June 8, 1967. Although thirty-five years have come and gone since this historic event, the survivors of the U.S.S. Liberty are still struggling with the fact that their story has never been heard.

While there has never been an official investigation into this event, we have learned from survivor accounts that for over 75 minutes the Israeli Defense Forces attacked the U.S.S. Liberty, killing 34 American soldiers and wounding an additional 172. With over 85% of the crew either dead or wounded, they somehow managed to keep the ship afloat after being hit by over 1000 rounds of rocket, cannon, machine gun, napalm hits, and even a direct hit from a torpedo.

This unprovoked attack took place in international waters, and by a trusted ally. The only explanation given to the survivors and their families as to why this attack took place was that it was an accident and that their ship was not identified as being American, regardless of the fact that our flag was proudly flown throughout the attack. Unfortunately, that explanation is not good enough for those whose lives have been impacted by this attack, and it should not be good enough for the American people. Let's not wait another thirty-five years before we provide the survivors of the U.S.S. Liberty an official investigation into why this attack took place and allow them to tell their story. We owe them more than a debt of gratitude for their sacrifice; we owe them the truth.

PROMOTING DEMOCRACY AND FREEDOM

HON. STEPHEN HORN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, during the past recess, I joined with Representative CURT WELDON and other Members in traveling to Russia, Uzbekistan, China, and Korea for discussions with government officials in those nations. I think I speak for all members of our delegation in thanking Representative WELDON for his excellent leadership of this group. I think we all also would agree that this trip provided an invaluable and enlightening look at key nations we must deal with in a broad range of issues.

Representative WELDON recently reported on our trip but today I want to insert into the RECORD my own most recent newspaper commentary, which outlines my own thoughts and assessment of our delegation's meetings. I ask that the commentary appear at this point in the RECORD.

PROMOTING DEMOCRACY AND FREEDOM

During the Memorial Day recess, I joined a 13-member bipartisan congressional delegation to meet with government leaders in Russia, Uzbekistan, China, and South Korea. One of the key goals of the delegation, led by Representative Curt Weldon (R–PA), was to visit North Korea. We wanted to express our interest in addressing food aid, agriculture, health, education, and other humanitarian assistance in a nation rampant with starvation and economic turmoil. Unfortunately, the North Korean government denied us entry at the last moment.

Traveling through three countries that were once part of the "Communist Bloc," we could see that democracy is now a growing force in these nations. Our delegation arrived in Moscow the day after the historic signing of the strategic arms reduction treaty by Presidents George W. Bush and Vladimir Putin. More good news came when we met with members of the State Duma, our legislative counterpart that once was a rubber stamp of the Kremlin, but now is a legitimate policy institution. We presented the legislators with 108 recommendations for U.S.-Russian engagement, and the Members of the Duma stated their desire to work with us to bring the U.S. and Russia closer together.

We visited the Kurchatov Institute, initially established to design Russia's first nuclear weapons, but now transformed into a research center for safe and environmentally friendly nuclear power generation. We attended the ribbon-cutting for the new American University in Moscow, where we met students and faculty in the American Studies program.

Over the last decade of reforms, Moscow has changed from a gray and solemn city to a tourist destination. Gold-domed churches, colorful buildings beautifully lit at night, billboards and neon abound in the new Moscow.

At our next stop in Uzbekistan, a former Soviet Republic which is key to the stability of Central Asia, we found a strongly pro-American sentiment. In the capital of Tashkent, the Uzbekistan President, Islom Karimov, told us he wants to model his country after America.

Uzbekistan (about the size of California) is one of the few countries in Central Asia that shares this pro-American stance. We visited with our troops in the hot and dry desert base of Karshi-Khanabad on the edge of Afghanistan, and assured them of the complete support of the American people. We delivered letters from school children and homemade cookies as tokens of appreciation.

When we arrived in Beijing, China, I was stunned by its growth since I was first there in 1981. Now it is a bustling metropolis complete with high rise buildings, luxury hotels, and streets packed with cars rather than bicycles. We met with Chinese President Jiang Zemin, who stressed that China and the United States have more interests in common than differences.

China has been fairly successful in its economic reforms. The one major concern I have had with China is its human rights record. Our goal must be to find common ground, while supporting freedom, such as last year's approval by Congress of permanent normal trade relations. Reunification with Taiwan remains a central focus for China's leaders, and our delegation was adamant that this issue must be solved peacefully.

In Seoul, South Korea, our ally for over 50 years, progress and expansion are still taking place. As hosts of the World Cup, Seoul was filled with visitors from around the world, lending a festive air to this vibrant city. The traffic reminded us of Los Angeles. The delegation visited our troops at Yongsan military base and at the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) on the border of North Korea. In a last attempt to obtain visas to visit North Korea, we were denied entry by General Secretary, Korean Workers' Party Kim Jong-Il (he is also "Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army.") Unfortunately, his country is stuck in the dark ages of totalitarian communism. But we are hopeful that our efforts to open dialogue will lay the groundwork for future meetings.

It is heartening to report that with the leaders of the countries that we met had praise for America's war on terrorism and President Bush's conduct of our foreign policy. Everywhere we saw leaders, there was great respect for President Bush. Our travels provided insight into the progress and economic growth that has taken hold as a result of democratic reforms. Our congressional delegation brings home a more informed picture of this progress and a set of goals to help us continue improving our relations with these important countries.

REPORT CONFIRMS SUDAN'S USE OF SLAVERY

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with you the findings from the report of the International Eminent Persons Group that was created out of the agreements negotiated by special envoy for Sudan, former Senator John Danforth. This group was invited to Sudan by both parties to the conflict in Sudan, the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Army, to investigate the occurrence of slavery and abduction there.

The report indicates that the group found sufficient evidence during its investigation that the Government of Sudan uses slavery as a part of a "counter-insurgency strategy pursued by successive governments in Khartoum."

These actions include incidences of abduction and associated abuses that occur in conjunction with attacks by pro-govemment militias known as murahaleen on villages in SPLA-controlled areas . . . the Government of Sudan and its predecessors have been responsible for arming murahaleen groups, for using them as auxiliary military forces and for allowing members of such forces to enjoy impunity for a wide range of serious crimes committed in the course of attacks. They bum villages, loot cattle, rape and kill civilians, and abduct and enslave men, women and children.

As this report shows, the government in Khartoum has used slavery as a strategy and as a weapon for years. It is time for Khartoum to end this horrible practice and for the world to condemn Khartoum for this atrocity.

As the Bush Administration and the international community press for peace in Sudan, ending the form of slavery practiced by Sudan needs to be at the forefront of the discussions.

FINDINGS

Finding 1. Changes in the international environment and within Sudan itself have raised hopes for progress toward peace in Sudan.

Finding 2. The United States, other concerned governments and international institutions should engage this possibility with energy on the one hand and rigorous conditionality on the other. Progress in dealing with human rights abuses is a key element in the establishment of a just and durable peace in Sudan.

Finding 3. Many observers note an improved political climate in Khartoum, characterized by a renewed dialogue among political parties and the return of representatives of some northern political parties to Khartoum. The Sudanese Government's acceptance of, and cooperation with, the mission of Senator John Danforth, and with our own mission, may be regarded as reflections of this change. Recent initiatives by the SPLM/A to encourage the institutions of civil society are also examples of favorable political developments.

Finding 4. Despite these positive signs, the people of Sudan continue to be subjected to a range of serious and sustained human-rights-abuses. These abuses have been extensively documented in numerous human rights reports, including those of Human Rights Watch, Anti-Slavery International, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Sudan and other credible observers. They include denial of rights of expression and association, restrictions on press freedom, harassment of certain opposition political groups and independent religious bodies, arbitrary arrest and detention, cruel and unusual punishment and arbitrary interpretation and application of laws.

Particularly serious abuses have occurred in connection with the current civil war. To one degree or another, all of the warring parties have engaged in such practices as the forced displacement of civilian populations, intentional attacks on civilians, abductions, the forcible recruitment of children and other civilians as soldiers and forced laborers, hostage taking, rape, looting, destruction of food supplies and the denial of access to humanitarian assistance. Women and children have suffered especially, both from abduction and sexual violence. All these practices are prohibited by international covenants and conventions.

The causes of these abuses are far-reaching and complex and must be understood and addressed as a whole.

Finding 5. Our Group's mandate called upon us specifically to examine slavery, abduction and forced servitude. We found a wide range of economic relationships between northerners and persons from the south who have either been displaced or have migrated to the north. Such relationships range from debt bondage to benign relations of sponsorship or adoption. The majority of these relations, while they may involve economic exploitation, do not fall under the rubric of slavery. However, we also found evidence of exploitative and abusive relationships that, in some cases, do meet the definition of slavery as contained in international conventions, which Sudan has signed. This evidence is confirmed in interviews conducted by the Group, which is consistent with reports and interviews carried out by other credible agencies and organizations.

Of particular concern is the pattern of abuses that occurs in conjunction with attacks by pro-government militias known as murahaleen on villages in SPLA-controlled areas near the boundary between northern and southern Sudan. These are characterized by: capture through abduction (generally accompanied by violence); the forced transfer of victims to another community; subjection to forced labor for no pay; denial of victims' freedom of movement and choice; and, frequently, assaults on personal identity such as renaming, forced religious conversion, involuntary circumcision, prohibition on the use of native languages and the denial of contacts with the victims' families and communities of origin.

Many of those who are abducted and enslaved remain with their abductors in the areas of South Darfur or West Kordofan; some escape or are returned; and others are sold or transferred to third parties. The Group was unable to establish the extent of the onward sale of slaves. It received no information that would confirm the existence of actual slave markets. The Group also found evidence of ways other than abduction in which persons are put into conditions of slavery, which include being lured by false promises of employment. There are reports, which the Group was unable to confirm, that some abducted children are detained in institutions misleadingly described as Koranic schools.

In Ed Da'ein the Group interviewed a number of Rizeigat men, women and children who had been detained after the SPLA capture of Yei. We concluded that these particular individuals were not victims of abduction.

Finding 6. The Group was not able to establish the number of persons who have been abducted and/or enslaved. There are vast divergences among available estimates. (See table under Research Priorities in the Supporting Analysis section.) The Government of Sudan and the SPLM/A have obstructed efforts by independent organizations from within and outside Sudan to investigate the problem of contemporary slavery and related issues.

Finding 7. The resurgence of slavery in contemporary Sudan differs both from the historical slave trade of the nineteenth-century and from the small-scale inter-tribal abduction (or "hostage-taking") that is endemic among many pastoral peoples in East and North-East Africa. The pattern of slave taking that has developed since the start of the civil war is, to a substantial degree, the product of a counter-insurgency strategy pursued by successive governments in Khartoum. This strategy involves arming local militias from northern Sudan. These militias attack villages in SPLA-controlled areas, principally along the boundary between northern and southern Sudan. They burn villages, loot cattle, rape and kill civilians, and abduct and enslave men, women and children. Such attacks are frequently carried out by militia members while employed by the government as auxiliary guards on military rail convoys traveling through SPLA-controlled areas.

Finding 8. The government acknowledges that abduction of civilians occurs. Its 1999 decision to create the Committee for the Elimination of Abduction of Women and Children (CEAWC) was a significant step in its recognition of the problem and its effort to address the plight of abducted persons. (See the discussion of CEAWC, including concerns about its effectiveness, in the Supporting Analysis section). However, the government has failed to acknowledge its own responsibility for acts committed by militias and other forces under its authority. The lack of judicial control and appropriate structures of military accountability means that militia members are able to act with impunity.

Finding 9. The challenges of dealing with the issues of slavery, abduction and forced servitude are made much greater by an absence of democratic institutions and practices, both in areas controlled by the government and in those controlled by the SPLM/A and other armed groups. Specifically, there is an absence of pluralism, the rule of law, freedom of the press and other means of exchanging information, accountability in government and public administration, and independence of the judiciary. In government-control led areas, this lack of transparency and accountability has severely limited the ability of citizens to voice grievances or seek judicial redress for a range of abuses, including abduction, slavery and forced servitude. In SPLM/A controlled areas, the lack of democratic governance, the obstruction of free inquiry, and the constraints imposed on civil society have hampered the ability to learn, the truth about alleged abuses of human rights, and to obtain remedies for them.

Finding 10. The Group notes with alarm recent reports from credible sources, including the Special Rapporteur on Sudan of the UN Commission on Human Rights, regarding increasing levels of fighting in areas of oil development in Western Upper Nile. The Group, while not able to visit this area, interviewed persons displaced in 2002 from Western Upper Nile. They report a pattern that includes the use of militias, attacks on civilians, forced displacement of large local populations, abduction and associated abuses. (See Selected Bibliography).

Finding 11. Bringing about an end to the practices of slavery, abduction and forced servitude will require Sudan's national political and military leaders to speak out forcefully and to act vigorously against these practices. Denials of the existence of slavery and rationalizations for its existence may be interpreted by some as indifference or, worse, license to continue these abuses.

AUTHORIZING THE APPOINTMENT OF NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS

HON. SAXBY CHAMBLISS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 6, 2002

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would authorize the appointment of National Guard officers as commanders of units composed of both active duty military personnel and National Guard troops in nonfederal status.

As a member of the House Armed Services Committee, I support many of the transformation initiatives our military is undertaking. Through the vision and leadership of Secretary Roche and General Jumper, the Air Force has been a leading proponent of transformation. The Joint Surveillance Target Attack Radar System, or JSTARS, and the 116th Air National Guard unit at Robbins Air Force Base are a prime example of a transformational mission. These unique units are on the verge of becoming even more transformational as they blend Air National Guard personnel into the active JSTARS unit. Currently, the 116th numbers more than 1,100 Air Guardsmen dedicated to defending our country. The 116th has been and will continue to be an Air National Guard unit that is the pinnacle of professionalism and honor; and will continue to be ready Anytime-Anywhere.

The Air Force has long been the model of full and seamless integration of the Reserve Components. Its Guard and Reserve associate programs are long-term success stories that maximize weapon system utilization while leveraging the expertise of Guard and Reserve personnel. In addition, active duty officers have successfully commanded Air National Guard fighter units.

My bill will provide another mechanism with which to further integrate active duty and National Guard members into blended units. At the same time, it preserves the unique non-Federal status of the National Guard officer while enabling that officer to command a unit of active duty and National Guard troops. This legislation is another step on the road of transformation.

REPEALING SUNSET OF ECONOMIC GROWTH AND TAX RELIEF RECONCILIATION ACT OF 2001 WITH RESPECT TO EXPANSION OF CERTAIN ADOPTION PROGRAMS

SPEECH OF

HON. EARL POMEROY

OF NORTH DAKOTA

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4800, a bill to repeal the sunset provisions in current law for adoption tax credit and adoption assistance programs. As a member of the Congressional Coalition on Adoption, and more importantly, as the father of two adopted children. I want to encourage my colleagues to support this meaningful legislation.

As an adoptive father, I know from personal experience that expanding opportunities for adoption is not only good tax policy, but good family policy. My own family was forever changed and enriched by the adoption of our two children from Korea. Through that first-hand experience, I am able to share with my colleagues my personal realization that adoption links children who need homes to families who will love them.

In the past, however, the prohibitive cost of the adoption process has threatened the opportunity to bring children in need together with would-be families who have modest incomes. It may come as some surprise to my colleagues to know that families can often spend between $8,000 and $30,000 in the course of adopting a child. Earlier this session. Congress recognized the importance of removing financial hurdles to adoption by raising the limit on the adoption tax credit to $ 10,000 for all adoptions and, in effect, opening thousands more homes and hearts to the miracle of adoption. Mr. Speaker, incentives for bringing families together should not be time limited and that is why I support this bill to repeal the sunset provisions on these tax credits.

I think it is particularly fitting that we consider this bill after recently celebrating Mother's Day, and so close to Father's Day. These two days have been set aside for us to thank our parents for raising us, for giving us a sense of security and independence, and for offering us their unconditional love. I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to all parents who know that there is no more important, more difficult, and ultimately more rewarding undertaking than raising a child.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting adoptive parents today by repealing the provisions that would end these important tax incentives.

URGING INCREASED FEDERAL FUNDING FOR JUVENILE TYPE 1 DIABETES RESEARCH

SPEECH OF

HON. GEORGE R. NETHERCUTT, JR.

OF WASHINGTON

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Mr. NETHERCUTT. Madam Speaker, as cochair of the Congressional Diabetes Caucus I commend the House of Representatives for passing H. Con. Res. 36. This bill declares that Federal funding for diabetes research should be increased as recommended by the Diabetes Research Working Group, DRWG, so that a cure for juvenile diabetes can be found. Increasing funding for Type I diabetes research is vitally important to the well being of our country.

Like many Americans across the Nation, I have a personal attachment to diabetes—my daughter has type I diabetes. This disease is one of the fastest-growing and most deadly diseases in the United States. Each year an estimated 800,000 new cases of diabetes are diagnosed. Diabetes currently costs the United States approximately $100 billion and kills approximately 200,000 people every year.

With these severe economic and health costs in mind, I am pleased that the House of Representatives has supported this legislation to increase funding for Type I diabetes research. Diabetes research at the NIH comprises less than 4 percent of the NIH budget. Although, diabetes affects over 16 million Americans and individuals with diabetes account for one out of every four Medicare dollars spent. An investment in research that results in a cure for diabetes would save our Nation billions of dollars and would also prevent millions of individuals from ever acquiring the disease.

In 1997, I was proud to introduce legislation in the House to authorize the establishment of a Diabetes Research Working Group, DRWG. The DRWG was comprised of a group of outstanding scientists and experts knowledgeable about diabetes. As cochair of the Congressional Diabetes Caucus, I saw the need to permit researchers to take a step back and attempt to better focus the Federal Government's efforts to establish a long-term plan to put us on track toward curing diabetes.

We have fallen drastically short of the funding levels suggested by the DRWG. In FY 2001 the NIH devoted $590 million to diabetes research, while the DRWG recommendation for funding was $1.07 billion. H. Con. Res. 36, passed by the House yesterday, supports the recommendations of the DRWG for $1.5 billion in research funding for FY 2003 at the NIH.

I fully support ensuring that all the recommendations of the DRWG are implemented. While we recognize the limitations of the budget, the momentum in the diabetes scientific community is too promising to slow our progress. Clinical trials involving the transplantation of insulin-producing cells into individuals with Type I diabetes has brought us within reach of a cure. Of the approximately 70 patients who have received these transplants, 80 percent no longer need to take insulin. As dramatic as these results are, several obstacles must still be overcome before this research can be made available to all individuals who suffer from diabetes.

H. Con. Res. 36 is a step in the right direction to support the NIH's extraordinary efforts and I urge the House of Representatives to consider the cost that diabetes inflicts on our Nation both in human and economic terms when considering funding for diabetes research and prevention later this year. The promise of diabetes research at this time is too great for us not to increase our commitment to the Americans who suffer from this devastating disease.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, June 10, 2002

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Lord God, people around the world find themselves living in scary times. Each morning new and disastrous alarms can ring. Calm every fear. Fortify the resolve of indiscriminate justice. Protect the innocent.

We thank You for those who are on the job in their public service to shield and protect fellow citizens. As we seek to strengthen homeland security in this country, empower us with compassion for those who live in far worse conditions than ours.

Awaken in all human hearts around the globe a respect for human life and concern for the family members of others. You alone, O Lord, are our true and lasting defense and the author of life, as well as unconditional love. We need to recognize Your Spirit within ourselves and in all our brothers and sisters of the human family. Now and forever. Amen.

SENATE—Monday, June 10, 2002

The Senate met at 2 p.m. and was called to order by the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, thank You for the gift of imagination You have entrusted to us. With our imaginations You have enabled us to form, hold, and achieve images of what You can make possible. Coupled with the gifts of hope and expectation, You help us imagine Your best for us and our Nation.

Now at the beginning of this new week, we form and hold a positive picture of this Senate Chamber filled with Your presence. Knowing that we are accountable to You for every thought we think and word we speak, we contemplate how we should act and react under the guidance of Your Spirit. We hold the image of how You want us to relate to others as fellow Americans who also believe in You and want Your vision for our Nation. We sense the civility and greatness of character You want from us. Help us to express to others the same kindness, graciousness, and respect we have received from You.

So we renew our dedication to You. We are Your daughters and sons in Your eternal inclusive family. In loyalty to You, we commit ourselves to work together for Your glory and the good of our beloved Nation. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada, led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 10, 2002.

To the Senate:

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REID thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 3 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes, with the time equally divided between the two leaders or their designees.

In my capacity as Senator from Nevada, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

(Mr. AKAKA assumed the chair.)

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MONITORING OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in this morning's paper I was stunned to read a headline but more stunned to read the story itself. It is in the Washington Post, titled "GOP Monitoring Lobbyists' Politics."

Among other things, the article says:

> Republicans are researching the party affiliation and political contributions of hundreds of lobbyists in Washington, part of a campaign that could deny government access and prime lobbying jobs to Democrats. . . . Copies of the bulky dossier, being compiled . . . will be given to top White House officials. . . . Early drafts of the report are already in the hands of a few senior administration officials and lawmakers . . . The report, dubbed the K Street Project, has been evolving in fits and starts over the past few years, but has been expedited and expanded now that Republicans control the White House and Federal agencies. Several Republican lobbyists have complained that they aren't getting the access to Federal agencies they feel they deserve.
> Republicans involved in the effort said they plan for it to be used by White House officials, lawmakers and staff to determine who can meet with party leaders in discussions of policy matters.

If there was ever anything that was immoral, wrong, and scandalous, this was it. To think that people who have jobs—you can pick any company you want—they hire somebody or they have worked for a number of years and they are going to check to see what party they belong to as to whether or not they can meet with a Federal agency, that is really bad. I do not think it is criminal, but I think it is on the verge of being criminal.

This sets a very dangerous precedent. This, in my opinion, is tantamount to McCarthyism. It involves the practice of compiling a new enemy's list to be circulated out of the administration and the Hill. Maybe we should include, rather than just McCarthy, Nixon. This appears to be something that would have happened during the Watergate years. Enemies are those who belong to or support the Democratic Party. They are targeted.

President Bush, during the campaign, said he wanted to change the tone of things in Washington. The tone has not been changed. Someone should get to the President and say this has got to stop. I cannot imagine President Bush liking this. If he does, it speaks volumes.

Top White House officials have said he wanted to change the tone in Washington, but today we learn he is working in tandem with those keeping secret lists of people's personal activity for intimidation, professional retaliation, or maybe even character assassinations.

It is not enough they block access to all non-Republicans. The story indicates that the "chief aim is to prod trade associations, lobbying firms, and corporations to hire more Republicans to represent them in Washington."

It is somewhat ironic the party most opposed to affirmative action supports its application when it comes to hiring lobbyists. They support affirmative action when it comes to the hiring of Republican lobbyists but oppose it when it comes to helping a minority gain entry to college.

The person behind this secret list is a frequent adviser and a visitor to the President. His name is in this story. The President should pick up the phone, call his friend, and denounce it and tell him that President George W. Bush will not tolerate what amounts to Nixonian-McCarthyism.

I don't know this President as well as I know his father, but I guarantee the first President Bush would not condone this. I guarantee that. One thing about the previous President Bush, he was a very pragmatic man. This is so wrong. It is extraordinarily disappointing if the President is complicit in these secret lists, lists designed to suppress workers' liberties in order to protect special interests. This is a witch-hunt, tracking and documenting people's personal choices with invasive tactics to threaten and intimidate freedom in the workplace.

If you have someone who represents a company or a trade association, will they now, each time there is an election where there is a turnover, have to fire all Republicans or fire all Democrats until all the lobbyists are of the same party as the person who is President of the United States? I hope not.

We have lobbyists, advocates, and consultants talked about in this article. Does it mean that next they will go after researchers, maybe teachers, doctors, or lawyers? Or maybe people from Hawaii? Pick any group. Where will it end? Will the Republican lawmakers be told not to meet with Democratic constituents? For a party that defined itself during the cold war as the enemy of communism, their new playbook would be the envy of one of the Communist dictators. Every elected official, Republican and Democrat, should denounce this. This is wrong.

Every person should call upon the President, a lawmaker, and say, stop this. Today's story about his supporters secretly compiling a new enemies list changes both the tone and the clock, but it changes it in the wrong direction. We do not want to turn the clock back to Nixonian-McCarthyism.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 2600 AND H.R. 2143

Mr. REID. Mr. President, there are two bills at the desk due for a second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to read the two bills en bloc, and then I would object to any further proceedings at this time with respect to these measures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will read the bills by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2600) to ensure the continuing financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risk from terrorism.

A bill (H.R. 2143) to make repeal of the estate tax permanent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bills will be placed on the calendar.

The Senator from Wyoming, Mr. THOMAS, is recognized.

HOMELAND DEFENSE

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to take a few minutes to speak a little about an issue that is current: homeland defense. It is not new to be current. Of course, homeland defense has been a very high topic in all of our minds since September 11, and will continue to be, indeed, for a very long time. I think the war we are in requires a great commitment from all of us to continue to provide homeland defense and security and the new prospects for us. I think we are unaccustomed to that. I want to take a few minutes to talk about that, and particularly about the President's proposal.

I think there is no question that homeland defense has become one of our most important issues, and that, of course, is coupled with what we are doing overseas. There is also no question about the best method of homeland defense, partly because it is something we haven't done in the past. It is particularly difficult to develop, and it is hard to determine the best way to do it. It is a domestic activity about which we haven't had to be concerned, particularly in the past, and we haven't dealt with it certainly to the extent we are now and which we must in the future.

I will admit—as you will probably detect—that I am not an expert on this at all. As a matter of fact, I am not on committees that are basically involved with it. But I am a bit disturbed about the reaction to the President's Cabinet-level plan he announced last week. The critics have been very vocal about not having a plan. We have been hearing that now for a number of months—that Tom Ridge has not been doing what we need to do; that he doesn't have the authority which we need to have for him to be able to accomplish what is going on here. Fairly high level criticism has been taking place. It is interesting. The critics for not having a plan are now just about as vocal about the plan the President has provided. I think that certainly is a strange kind of thing and one that is not helpful to accomplishing what we want to accomplish.

I think there is no question that a plan of this size and of this importance will be altered before it is put into place. I do not know of any plan this size that has come before the Congress that isn't changed, polished, and accommodated before it is finally agreed to. But the point is there has to be one to begin. I think it is really important that we deal with it now. It is there, and it is what the critics wanted. I don't know why they continue to criticize.

I am surprised and am a little dismayed that the media has continued to use this proposal as a way to create controversy. I guess the media's job—whatever the issue is—is to pick on that part which is reflected on by a minority of the people who have been critical rather than a majority. Indeed, 72 percent, according to the polls, are favorable. It is kind of interesting that this moves their way, and I guess that is the media's way of doing things.

One of the complaints is that the plan came out overnight—it came out very quickly. I think that is not the case. Tom Ridge did an interview the other day in which he indicated that he has been in place now for quite some time and has not, of course, been a Cabinet member. He has not had anything but his own office to handle. But he has been working on this for a long time, including a lot of people. The idea that it came out overnight from people in the President's little group is not the case. There has been a great deal of talk about it within the administration and a great number of ideas as to how this might best be done, as I think it should be. I think it would be sort of ridiculous to be talking about something publicly before it comes out. That is why it came out now, and that is why this is the time to talk about it publicly.

I must confess I get a little impatient sometimes with the way these things are handled. It is easier to sit up in the grandstands and be critical than to be on the field and have to call the plays. That is, of course, what the President has to do.

I think it deals with a problem. The problem, of course, is that all of us are concerned about security. There is no one in government or outside government who doesn't want to try to detect what is going on and do something about it, whether it is a highway patrolman in Wyoming or a CIA agent or an FBI agent. Sometimes it is objective, sometimes it is seen, or sometimes it is suspected; then what do you do?

We haven't had a central place to accumulate all of these possibilities so they can be evaluated and so something can be done about them. There are as many as 100 different government agencies that have some responsibility for homeland security. I suspect it is almost every agency. No one has had the final accountability. No one has had to say there is something that really should be investigated and should be turned over to people to further investigate.

The Coast Guard has several missions: Research, rescue, maritime treaties. It, of course, reports to the Transportation Department. Its primary responsibilities are rails, bridges, and airways.

There is really sort of a lack of continuity.

The Customs Service, among other duties, collects tariffs, prevents smuggling. It is part of the Treasury Department whose primary responsibility is not regular security but indeed physical security.

We have not had a central place for this information until recently. Now we do. Times have changed.

Absolutely now, there will be someone in charge. The bureaucrats are unchangeable, it is said. I don't believe that. I believe change can come when the leadership shows the way and insists upon change. That is what it is all about. That is why there are heads of departments. It is why someone is a Cabinet member—to take the policy of their leader, the President, and to ensure it is implemented. I have never worked in the bureaucracy, but I suppose where there are thousands of people, it is a little bit difficult to do. But that is their task. That is their job. I think it can bring about change.

It would be too bad if the Congress failed to change. I read about some of the congressional committees being concerned about their jurisdiction and that this might change that. Change is inevitable. Change is something we ought to look at and accept, if it has merit. The idea of being resistant to change is a little hard, and it is not very helpful. I suspect there is some of that in the Senate. We hear all kinds of voices coming out here.

I am no expert, as I mentioned before. I suspect that maybe this department could be smaller. You could have a little more selective group that comes together, if indeed then the things that are determined by this smaller homeland security group could be brought to the President and to his Cabinet, and the President would ensure that each of these Cabinet people caused their departments to do what is necessary; that is, to support the central agency. Even today I understand that. But when you are talking about hundreds of thousands of people, of course, it is less easy. I understand that.

But I do think there has to be a central but real war to a large extent—both domestically and overseas—carried out by intelligence, and carried out by centralized information, and by knowing what is happening. This is an entirely different kind of war than we have ever had in the past. We will have to have different arrangements to do it.

I think if you are a frontline worker for the FBI, CIA, or some other law enforcement or intelligence agency, and you see something that raises suspicions, you need to have a place to report it immediately, and you should expect your supervisors to treat it with the seriousness it deserves. Information must be fully shared so that we can follow all of those leads and hopefully prevent a tragedy such as happened to us before.

I hope we can consider the President's recommendation and make the changes we believe we need. I think we should see what weaknesses we have had so we can change those. Certainly there have been some. I suppose some of them were not necessarily weaknesses. There is a difference in the climate, there is a difference in the atmosphere, a difference in the challenge. When that happens, there has to be a difference in the way we behave.

I look forward to that. I hope we can come out with something better than what we received.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, am I correct, we are in morning business at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PENSION REFORM

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, the front page of today's New York Times has an article with a title that reads "Enthusiasm Ebbs for Tough Reform in Wake of Enron." That headline points out a political challenge that those of us in Congress have to deal with over the next few months; that is, the challenge to enact meaningful legislation while this terrible catastrophe which befell many employees and investors in relation to Enron is still fresh in mind.

I, for one, am not ready to concede that we cannot take legislative action to make sure the country's workers are not protected from the next Enron-type meltdown. We need to take that legislative action. It needs to be a priority of the Congress. I rise to speak about some of the elements that legislative action ought to contain.

Hardly a day goes by when we are not hearing about the collapse of another corporation. It is not just Enron.

I think we have all come to recognize the problem of corporate mismanagement, the problem of questionable accounting, or actual dishonest accounting, the problem of misuse or abuse of the tax provisions early in the law. All of that is, unfortunately, more widespread than just the Enron example.

These corporate misdeeds, executive malfeasance, accounting chicanery, unfortunately, provide grist for virtually every front page we see these days. These stories will not stop on their own. The problems will not go away on their own. Apparently, the system we have had in place for a long time is not working as it should. We need to pass legislation to address these recurring themes or else we will jeopardize a long-term economic recovery, which I know we are all hoping very much is in place and scheduled to occur.

I have referred to a New York Times article. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WYDEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, as noted in the article, Senator DASCHLE has indicated he would like to bring a bill to the Senate floor dealing with these issues before the August recess. I think that is an admirable goal, one that the entire Senate needs to join. Unfortunately, the administration and the House and some colleagues in the Senate have not shown the kind of zeal for these necessary reforms that is going to be required. I certainly hope the delays and obstacles that have arisen so far do not prevent us from bringing meaningful legislation before the Senate.

Let me refer to a couple other articles while I am on the subject. I was reading these articles over the weekend in Business Week. One is an editorial in the current edition of Business Week, entitled "Accounting: Stronger Reforms, Please." It is a very interesting article, one that I think deserves the attention of everyone. Let me read a couple of paragraphs from it because I think it does make a point on which all of us need to focus. It says:

> If you hoped that the Enron/Andersen scandal would provide an opportunity for just those sort of farsighted regulatory improvements, start worrying. There are signs that the Bush Administration, under pressure from the accounting lobby and business groups such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, is willing to support only mild changes in the current system. And there's a danger that Congress will acquiesce. The House of Representatives has already passed a very watered-down bill.
> That's wrong. Halfhearted reform is bad for the public, bad for the economy, and even bad for the accounting industry, which needs to reestablish its credibility. Instead, we think the best bet for strong accounting and financial reform is the legislation proposed by Senator Paul Sarbanes, Democrat from Maryland, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee.
> Sarbanes' draft legislation—which is opposed by Senator Phil Gramm, the ranking GOP member of the Banking Committee, and the Bush Administration—would set up a strong private-sector board to oversee public-company accounting.

It goes on to detail what is in the legislation and to urge that the legislation be considered and passed by the Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from Business Week's current edition be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 2.)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, let me also call the attention of my colleagues to another section in the same magazine called The Barker Portfolio. It is entitled "A Three-Point Plan for SEC Reform." It is by Robert Barker, and he goes into some detail about what he believes is an appropriate set of reforms for the Securities and Exchange Commission in order that these kinds of problems can be avoided in the future.

I ask unanimous consent that this be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 3.)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, before leaving this general subject, let me talk a little about a subject on which I have focused in recent weeks, which is part of this overall corporate mismanagement problem that we have been talking about, and that is the problem of pensions. What do we do to preserve the retirement of workers in these companies that turn out to have cooked the books or to have engaged in some kind of practice that causes the value of that company to go away?

There are essentially four major issues that I think need to be focused on regarding retirement security for Americans. Let me put that chart up and go through the list once more for those who are interested in this subject.

There are four major areas where we need to concentrate our attention and where I believe we can legislate in a constructive fashion. First, we need to have a goal of providing some type of retirement or pension plan for all workers in our society. There is no reason why a person should work 25, 30, 35, even 40 years at a job—or a series of jobs, which is much more common in this day and time—and wind up with no pension, no income, nothing they can depend on other than Social Security once they get to retirement age.

Pensions and retirement coverage have not increased as a percentage of the workforce in the last 30 years. We have recent studies that have indicated that. About 50 percent of private sector workers actually have some sort of pension plan today. That is nationwide. The statistic is 50 percent. My home State of New Mexico, unfortunately, has the worst statistic of any of the 50 States. The percentage is 70 percent have no pension plan and are not expecting to have a pension; whereas, only 30 percent of private sector employees do have some sort of pension plan.

I can remember the discussions in previous years around here where we talked about a three-legged stool when it came to retirement security. We said, when a person gets to retirement, they are going to have three things to depend upon, including Social Security payments—and we all want to see those continue. They are going to have their savings, and they are going to have their pension. The reality is very different from that model or that ideal that we have described for many years.

The reality is that most people who have worked through their entire careers—at least in New Mexico where 70 percent have no pension—most people do not have three legs on the "stool" on which they are planning to sit. They have most likely one leg because they have not been able to save a significant amount, and they don't have any sort of pension or 401(k) plan. That is the first issue and the first item on the chart.

All workers need a retirement or pension plan of some sort. We can do much more to expand pension coverage to make it more attractive for employers to provide pension coverage and to make it more available to workers in our society. We need to get about the business of doing that.

Second, all workers should have a right to a secure retirement savings. The problems we have seen with Enron, the problems we have seen with other corporations, where retirement savings have been essentially frittered away, or put into stock by employers which turned out not to have value, need to be fixed. There is legislation that Senator KENNEDY has proposed, which has been reported out of the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee that I supported. That legislation is awaiting consideration on the Senate floor. I hope very much that we can move to consider that legislation.

In the Finance Committee, we are also looking at legislation which would help ensure that people who have these pension savings, or who have a 401(k) plan, can be guaranteed those funds will be there when they actually retire.

We need to protect employees from conflicts of interest that allow accountants, analysts, investment advisers, and, in some cases, employers to act in their own self-interest, rather than in the best interest of the employee who is supposed to benefit from that retirement plan.

Third, all workers must have pension portability. One of the problems today in our workforce and our work careers is that most people will move from job to job, and over the period of 30, 35, 40 years of work, an average worker may have 8 or 10 jobs. We need to be sure they do not lose their pension benefits as they move from job to job. We need to be sure they can take those benefits with them and that the benefits will be portable.

Again, we need to change the laws to make that occur on a more ready basis. I hope very much we can move to legislation to accomplish that.

The fourth item I want to mention is all workers should be treated on a comparable basis as regards to retirement benefits. We are just now trying to understand all of the various mechanisms that have been used in some of these companies to get us to a result which we have seen over and over where the top executives of a corporation, when the corporation essentially collapses as a financial matter, where the top executives walk off with tens and even hundreds of millions of dollars in deferred compensation, in executive compensation of one kind or another; whereas the workers for that same corporation may wind up with nothing in their retirement accounts.

We need to find out what those abuses are. We need to find out ways to correct them. We need to plug those loopholes in the existing law, and I believe we can.

Mr. President, let me stop with that. I see other colleagues are waiting to speak. I believe very strongly this issue of retirement security needs to be on the agenda of this Congress. I know Senator DASCHLE is trying to put together a series of proposals coming from various committees so that we can consider it before the August recess. Retirement security is one of the provisions that we would hopefully give attention to as a result of or in the wake of the Enron scandal. I hope we can do that. I think the people of the country want to see us do that.

I close with the article with which I began my discussion, "Enthusiasm Ebbs for Tough Reform in Wake of Enron." We need to prove that headline wrong and demonstrate that this Congress is committed to tough reform, and one of those reforms is in the area of retirement security.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ENTHUSIASM EBBS FOR TOUGH REFORM IN WAKE OF ENRON

(By Stephen Labaton and Richard A. Oppel, Jr.)

WASHINGTON, June 9.—Six months after the collapse of Enron, a wave of enthusiasm for overhauling the nation's corporate and accounting laws has ebbed and the toughest proposals for change are all but dead.

A powerful group of lobbyist, playing on partisan disagreement in Congress, appears to have killed efforts to impose tight new controls on corporate conduct. And while some Democrats hope to turn the inaction to their advantage in the fall elections, other lawmakers say that—barring more business meltdowns that deepen the stock market's two-year slump—voters are unlikely to care enough to influence their ballots.

Bills imposing more stringent accounting standards, changing the tax and accounting treatment of employee stock options and setting tougher conflict-of-interest rules for stock analysts and accounting firms have all fallen victim to political gridlock.

Corporate America and the stock markets have not waited for Washington. Instead, they have undertaken a host of changes in response to the problems highlighted by Enron and reinforced by corporate and accounting failures in the telecommunications, cable and energy industries. Investors have fled companies whose accounting or governance practices fail to measure up to post-Enron standards. Some Republicans say all this is evidence that the system is working without heavy-handed interference by lawmakers.

Congress did much to focus attention on flaws in the nation's corporate and accounting practices with a series of investigative hearings earlier this year, the most dramatic of them conducted by committees in the Republican-led House. Even so, with the debate over Enron at full boil, the House adopted a measure in April that rejected the toughest proposed changes.

Senate Democrats now predict that they will have the votes to get a broad measure of their own out of the Banking Committee later this month on a party-line vote, but only by tempering it to win the support of moderates. Senator Tom Daschle, the majority leader, is said by lawmakers and his aides to be committed to trying to move a bill to the Senate floor before the August recess, in hopes of using the Republicans' opposition to the measure against them in fall campaigns.

Even if that bill survives a filibuster threatened by Senate Republicans, lawmakers and lobbyists say that there is little chance of reconciling the differences between the House and the Senate this year.

All of Washington has not been paralyzed. Federal regulators—spurred in part by state prosecutors—have become more aggressive on the enforcement front.

In Congress, meanwhile, legislation to modify pension laws—a response to the enormous losses in the retirement funds of employees at Enron and other troubled companies—might have a better chance of passage.

Still, even lawmakers who favor a tough response to the seeming explosion in business misconduct detect little fervor among voters for a Washington crackdown. Absent a spate of further disclosures, they say, the issues may remain too remote to change many voters' minds.

"The politics will be determined by the circumstances," said Senator Jon S. Corzine, Democrat of New Jersey and a former top executive of Goldman, Sachs & Company. "If we continue to see an erosion of the stock market and more cases like Adelphia and Tyco, then it will be significant. If we see less, then it may have less of an impact, because these can become issues that are hard for people like my mom to understand."

Other lawmakers, particularly Republicans, say Enron's moment as a galvanizing issue has quickly passed.

"The feeding frenzy is pretty much over," said Senator Phil Gramm of Texas, the ranking Republican on the banking committee, who has worked closely with industry lobbyists to kill many of the Democrats' proposals. "People started looking at making all these radical changes and decided there was a real cost involved and that it would not solve the Enron problem."

Mr. Gramm said regulators and the marketplace are already correcting the excesses exemplified by Enron and its auditor, Arthur Andersen, relieving Congress of the need to enact comprehensive legislation.

"A lot of progress has already been made," he said. "The president has put forward a strong program, the Securities and Exchange Commission is moving forward, and the exchanges are changing their rules. No one who sits on an audit committee will be the same after Enron." Mr. Gramm's wife, Wendy, a onetime government regulator who serve on Enron's audit committee, resigned from the company's board last week.

Representative Billy Tauzin, the Louisiana Republican who held hearings on Enron's collapse, agreed with Mr. Gramm's appraisal, but he said it will still vital for Congress to act, even though the prospects for legislation are not strong.

"It's all very iffy," he said. "There is a huge rift between where the Senate believes these issues ought to go and what the House has already passed. I don't know if it gets worked out in time."

Both Democrats and Republicans have already begun to consider strategies to make the best political use of the issue in the November elections. The Republicans are relying heavily on the rule-making and enforcement actions of the S.E.C.

On the Democratic side, one idea under discussion by advisers to Senator Daschle is to bundle disparate proposals into one package, making it more efficient to both confront recalcitrant Republicans in the House and make a poltical issue in the fall of the legislation's defeat.

In any event, politicians and lobbyists say that any change in the accounting treatment of stock options is dead for the year—largely because of the perception that Silicon Valley, where such options are as ubiquitous as the Internet itself, is up for grabs in the 2002 and 2004 elections.

Proposals have been made to force companies to account for options as a compensation cost—now they are not charged against corporate earnings—and to limit the ability of companies to take tax deductions for issuing options. But technology companies, financial firms and corporate trade groups—with the backing of President Bush—have lobbied lawmakers around the country to maintain the current system.

For now, lawmakers say, they have trumped the arguments of such people as Alan Greenspan, the Federal Reserve chairman, and the multibillionaire investor Warren E. Buffett that the current treatment of options contributed to corporate overreaching in the 1990's.

The Bush administration has not been a visible force in the legislative battles, relying instead on likeminded allies—notably Senator Gramm—to bottle up the most ambitious legislation. He has met repeatedly with corporate lobbyists and urged them to press sympathetic Democrats or those facing tight races, like Thomas R. Carper of Delaware, Evan Bayh of Indiana and Zell Miller of Georgia, to block legislation from reaching the Senate floor.

Democrats say that effort appears to have failed and that Senator Paul S. Sarbanes, Democrat of Maryland, appears to have the support to get a bill approved by the banking committee. It would sharply curtail the consulting work performed by accounting firms, create a relatively independent oversight board for the accounting profession, require large corporations to rotate their auditors every five years, and impose tighter conflict of interest restrictions on stock analysts than the measure that was passed by the House.

Mr. Gramm has been working closely with the administration on an alternative measure that does not tighten conflict of interest regulations for analysts or auditing firms. His wife's Enron ties seem to have produced no political pressure on Mr. Gramm—who has announced his intention to retire from the Senate after this year—to shy from the debate.

The post-Enron proposals prompted scores of industry associations and hundreds of corporations to retain lobbyists and use their own employees to try to weaken or kill the measures. They include the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, which is dominated by the largest firms. Hundreds of companies, including Oracle and Intel, have fought against changing the treatment of stock options. And many of the largest Wall Street firms have lobbied against changes in the laws governing stock analysts.

The drift in Congress largely reflects the power of the accounting profession. Accounting firms ranked as three of President Bush's top eight campaign donors in 2000, and over all, the industry made $14.7 million in campaign donations to both Democrats and Republicans during the last election cycle, according to the Center for Responsive Politics. The profession has influential members in many congressional districts and has been known to use lawmakers' own accountants to lobby them.

Pension legislation may stand a better chance in Congress, although its prospects remain cloudy.

The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Max Baucus of Montana, is crafting an alternative to a bill by Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, that drew strong opposition from business lobbyists and Republicans.

On some points, Mr. Baucus's bill is likely to contain provisions similar to those in the House bill, like permitting workers to sell company stock awarded as a 401(k) match three years after they receive it. Senate aides say the bill may also place limits on certain forms of executive compensation. Mr. Daschle is warming to the provisions that are expected to form the Baucus proposal, Senate aides say.

But they say the Baucus plan is unlikely to include the Kennedy proposal's provision prohibiting most companies from both offering their stock as a 401(k) investment option and using it to match employee contributions. This was designed to keep employees from putting too much retirement money in their own stock, as happened at Enron.

One major issue that remains unresolved is how to give employees better access to investment advice. Investment management companies have been lobbying to permit firms that administer retirement plans to offer advice to participants. Among other things, they would be permitted to recommend investments for which they could receive a fee.

Senate aides say the Baucus proposal may instead contain a provision encouraging employers to hire independent firms to provide advice.

[From Business Week]

ACCOUNTING: STRONGER REFORMS, PLEASE

Perhaps the only benefit of a major scandal is that it creates pressure for reforms. Politicians who would otherwise listen to special interests are forced by public pressure to make long-needed changes. Often, the legislative and regulatory changes that follow a scandal can help build a strong foundation for economic growth.

If you hoped that the Enron/Anderson scandal would provide an opportunity for just those sort of farsighted regulatory improvements, start worrying. There are signs that the Bush Administration, under pressure from the accounting lobby and business groups such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, is willing to support only mild changes in the current system. And there's a danger that Congress will acquiesce. The House of Representatives has already passed a very watered-down bill.

That's wrong. Halfhearted reform is bad for the public, bad for economy, and even bad for the accounting industry, which needs to reestablish its credibility. Instead, we think the best for strong accounting and financial reform is the legislation proposed by Senator Paul S. Sarbanes (D-Md.), chairman of the Senate Banking Committee.

Sarbanes' draft legislation—which is opposed by Senator Phil Gramm (R-Tex.), the ranking GOP member of the Banking Committee, and the Bush Administration—would set up a strong private-sector board to oversee public-company accounting. It would severely limit consulting services that accounting firms can offer the companies they audit. And, not the least, the bill would require CEOs and CFOs to sign their company's audit reports and forfeit a year's worth of bonuses, incentive-based pay, and profits on stock sales if the company has to materially restate its earnings. That would reduce the aggravating sight of CEOs claiming they had no idea what kind of wrongdoing their company was engaged in.

Equally important, the Sarbanes bill would authorize more money for the Securities & Exchange Commission and permit the agency to hire at least twice as many professionals as the Bush Administration is willing to fund. These additional resources are essential for the SEC to do its regulatory duty. According to a report from the General Accounting Office, the SEC's workload increased by 80% in the 1990s, but its staffing rose only 20%. In 2001, for example, the SEC reviewed only 16% of all annual reports—way below the desirable level.

No business or profession likes closer oversight. But finding the right balance between markets and regulation is essential for a well-functioning economy. Reform is never easy—but history suggest that it's essential.

A THREE-POINT PLAN FOR SEC REFORM

(By Robert Barker)

A specter is haunting Wall Street—the specter of Main Street retreating from investments and toward savings, going from stocks to CDs. That's why, as the late, lamented bull market nears its 20th anniversary this summer, "we are on the verge of the greatest overhaul of securities regulation since the SEC was created," Securities & Exchange Commission Chairman Harvey Pitt said recently. "Nothing is off the table."

Pitt was addressing an Investor Summit that the called on May 10 in Washington to air investors' concerns and answer questions. I listened, via the Web, to more than three hours of talk, most of it pertinent (box). Yet some specific investor demands need amplification. Here's a short list of concrete fixes. If Wall Street and its regulators can't deal with this simple stuff, their reform effort will have failed:

FASTER. A CEO today can dump a ton of his company's stock on the first day of the month and need not report it until the 10th day of the next month. Not only should that disclosure be made much sooner—within a day or two of the sale, as now is being discussed—but such insider trades should be disclosed for free via the SEC's Web site, which is not the case today.

Quarterly and annual corporate reports, now required 45 and 90 days, respectively, after each period, will likely be accelerated to 30 and 60 days. That's good, but faster filing should not end there. Mutual-fund holdings should be disclosed at least quarterly instead of every six months, the current rule. Opponents say faster disclosure will make it harder for funds to trade without tipping their hand and ultimately hurting investors. But companies that manage $100 million or more—including most fund advisory firms—already must disclose portfolio holdings 45 days after the close of each quarter. Cut that to 30 days, tops. Short positions, now exempt should be required as well as longs.

FAIRER. The SEC's regulation FD, or Fair Disclosure, seems to have helped put individual investors on a more equal footing with professionals when companies disclose potentially market-moving information. Before its adoption in August, 2000, the public routinely was barred from management's conferencecalls with stock analysts. Not so now. There remains, however, a forbidden zone—the "road shows" put on for institutional investors by companies preparing to sell securities, particularly initial public offerings of stock. Just as the SEC was able to invite the public via the Internet to its own recent Investor Summit, investors small as well as large should be asked to attend and pose questions at these pre-IPO presentations. It's one thing to read a prospectus laden with legalese; it's better to hear how management discusses what's in the prospectus.

PLAINER. Speaking of legalese, regulators have long encouraged the use of "plain English" in securities filing. A charitable assessment of this initiative would be to say it has achieved limited success. To any who doubt this, I point to the 749-page proxy statement (including Annexes A through N) filed recently by AT&T. If you own AT&T, you're supposed to use this to decide how you'll vote by July 10 on the company's plan to restructure and merge its cable unit with Comcast. Meanwhile, regulators—while trying to make investor communications clear to more than just the securities bar—might also try setting a good example. In SEC lingo, the AT&T proxy is a "DEFM14A." A mutual fund's annual report is an "N-SAR." A tender offer may be a "13E-4" or a "14D-1." Our government can do much better.

Only a fool would expect Washington to solve every problem in today's stock market. As SEC Commissioner Isaac Hunt put it: "The burden rests with individual investors to research the information and make intelligent investment decisions on their own." Fair enough. At the same time, investors don't have to buy what Wall Street is selling. So the burden is equally on Wall Street to show honestly that what it's offering is worth buying. Otherwise, I'd say the intelligent investment decision is a bank CD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii is recognized.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak in morning business for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

KAHO'OLAWE; REBIRTH OF A SACRED HAWAIIAN ISLAND

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to call my colleagues' attention to an excellent exhibit that opened last week at the Smithsonian Institution's Arts and Industries Building, entitled, "Kaho'olawe; Rebirth of a Sacred Hawaiian Island." The exhibit chronicles the rich history of the island of Kaho'olawe from its mythical beginnings to current efforts towards its protection and revitalization. The exhibit is a project of the Bishop Museum Native Hawaiian Culture and Arts Program, and is sponsored by the Smithsonian Asian Pacific American Program, Bernice Pauahi Bishop Museum, Community Development Pacific, and Protect Kaho'olawe 'Ohana/Fund.

I was deeply moved by the exhibit and its eloquent reflection of the Hawaiian value of "aloha aina," which means love for the land, which serves as a foundation for the culture of Hawaii's indigenous peoples; the Native Hawaiians. The profound appreciation for Hawaiian culture and its values is reflected in Hawaii's state motto, 'Ua mau ke'ea 'o ka 'aina 'i ka pono, "the life of the land is perpetuated in its righteousness." The exhibition celebrates Hawaii's culture and people in telling the story of Kaho'olawe.

Ancient chants—plaintive and poetic oral histories of Hawaii—along with archaeological evidence indicate that Kaho'olawe was inhabited by Native Hawaiians who fished and farmed in coastal and upland settlements scattered across the island. In ancient times, the island was referred to as Kanaloa for the god of the ocean and the foundations of the earth.

From 1941 to 1994, Kaho'olawe and its surrounding waters were under the control of the United States Navy. Both the island and the waters of Kaho'olawe were used as a live-fire training range. In 1990, President George Bush directed the Department of Defense to cease using the island of Kaho'olawe as a training range. In 1993, Congress enacted legislation that recognized the cultural significance of Kaho'olawe, required its return to the State of Hawaii, and directed the Navy to conduct unexploded ordnance cleanup and environmental restoration in partnership with the State of Hawaii. Congress authorized Federal funding through 2003 for the cleanup of Kaho'olawe. We continue to work with the Navy to ensure that this funding is utilized for maximum cleanup of the island before access is turned over to the State of Hawaii in late 2003.

The restoration of Kaho'olawe is more than the cleanup of ordnance. Native Hawaiians also referred to Kaho'olawe as "Ko Hema Lamalama," the Southern Beacon, in reference to the island's use as a navigational aid, or shining beacon, for long-distance voyagers returning to Hawaii. For many Hawaiians, the vision of a fully restored Kaho'olawe serves as a guiding light to the revitalization of Native Hawaiian culture.

I encourage all of my colleagues and their staff to visit this exhibit at the Smithsonian Institution's Arts and Industries Building. I always welcome the opportunity to share the true essence of Hawaii with my colleagues and our fellow citizens on the U.S. mainland. We have the honor and privilege of showing you a bit of Hawaii in Washington, DC, until September 2, 2002, and I invite you to share in this wonderful experience.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is now closed.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 625, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 625) to provide Federal assistance to States and local jurisdictions to prosecute hate crimes, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Reid (for Biden) amendment No. 3807, to provide reliable officers, technology, education, community prosecutors, and training in our neighborhoods.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let me begin on a point of common ground. We can—each and every one of us—agree that the actions constituting hate crimes are wrong in all respects. Let me state, unequivocally, that as much as we condemn all crimes, a hate crime can be more sinister than a non-hate crime. And let me state, with equal conviction and clarity, that I care about stamping out hate crimes as much as any member of this body. I think everybody know that.

A crime committed not just to harm an individual, but in order to send a message of hatred to an entire community is appropriately punished more harshly, or in a different manner, than other crimes. This is especially true when the targeted community is defined on the basis of immutable traits. The brutal murders of James Byrd in Jasper, TX, and Matthew Shepard, in Laramie, WY, among others, remain seared into our Nation's conscience because of the savagery they suffered solely because of their attackers' irrational and hateful prejudice. The worse a criminal's motive, the worse the crime, and a unanimous Supreme Court recognized as much in upholding Wisconsin's sentencing enhancement for hate crimes. These same considerations also prompted the U.S. Sentencing Commission to establish a sentencing guideline that provides an enhanced sentence for a Federal defendant whose crime was motivated by hate. These decisions are ones we can all applaud.

Not only are the offenses themselves worse, but hate crimes also are more likely to provoke retaliatory crimes. They inflict deep, lasting and distinct injuries—some of which never heal—on victims and their family members. They incite community unrest. And, at bottom, they are downright un-American. The melting pot of America is the most successful multiethnic, multiracial, and multfaith country in all of recorded history. We should keep our proud heritage of diversity in mind as we consider the atrocities routinely sanctioned in other countries committed against persons entirely on the basis of their racial, ethnic, or religious identity.

So we all should be able to agree that the battle against hate crimes is and must be America's fight. And despite the often contentious partisan rhetoric surrounding the issue of Federal hate crimes legislation, there exists widespread agreement on these fundamental points: Hate crimes are insidiously harmful, they should be vigorously prosecuted, and the Federal Government has a role to play in reducing the incidence of these crimes in our Nation. The dispute, then, centers not on whether Congress should act in this area, but rather on what should be done at the national level.

There is no dispute that hate crimes themselves often involve particularly horrific facts. They rivet our attention and move us to consider almost any measure that would appear to check such bigotry. But the proposed legislation introduced by my good friend from Massachusetts, S. 625, also brings us face to face with the foundations of our constitutional structure—namely, bedrock principles of Federalism that, for more than 2 centuries, have vested States with the primary responsibility for prosecuting violent crimes committed within their boundaries. And on this point we must be crystal clear: every hate crime—every bit of criminal conduct that S. 625 proposes to federalize—is, and always has been, a crime in every jurisdiction throughout our Nation. The question is not whether these crimes can be prosecuted, but who should prosecute them under our constitutional framework.

In other words, S. 625 brings us to a difficult intersection between our well-intentioned desire to investigate, prosecute, and, hopefully, end these vicious crimes, and our unequivocal duty to respect the constitutional boundaries governing any legislative action that we take. We, who are trusted with the awesome responsibility of making our Nation's laws, must scrupulously abide by the rule of law in this process. Congress has a duty to make sure that the legislation it enacts is constitutional. To shrug off that duty is more than just negligent; it invites trouble and may even solicit scorn. A Supreme Court Justice for whom I have the greatest respect, Justice Scalia, said the following just a few years ago:

> My court is fond of saying that acts of Congress come to the court with a presumption of constitutionality. But if Congress is going to take the attitude that it will do anything it can get away with, and let the Supreme Court worry about the Constitution, perhaps the presumption is unwarranted.

So, while all of us would agree that hate crimes are a problem with which Congress must deal, our focus must be on the appropriate and constitutional means to best accomplish that objective.

In the face of some of the recent hate crimes that have riveted public attention—and have unfortunately made the name James Byrd synonymous with Jasper, TX; and the name Matthew Shepard synonymous with Laramie, WY—I am committed in my view that the Senate must speak out and act against hate crimes.

I have long been on record with my view that the Federal Government can play a valuable role in responding to hate crime. In fact, I sponsored the Hate Crime Statistics Act of 1990. But any Federal response—to be a meaningful and lasting one—must abide by the constitutional limitations imposed on Congress, and be cognizant of the limitations on Congress's enumerated powers that are routinely enforced by the courts. I was a prime sponsor of that bill, and I am proud that I was. It was a bill with a lot of controversy at the time. This is more true today than it would have been even a mere decade ago—ever since the U.S. Supreme Court revisited the Federalism doctrine in a string of decisions beginning in 1992.

Having consistently checked the expansion of Federal jurisdiction in areas traditionally reserved to the States over the past decade, the Supreme Court has cast grave doubt over the legitimacy of S. 625. I am not alone in believing that this bill, if passed into law, will be struck down as an unconstitutional invasion into States' rights. I take no pleasure in holding this view. In fact, I was the primary co-sponsor of the Violence Against Women Act of 1994—a law that created Federal jurisdiction over certain serious acts of violence directed at women. Senator BIDEN was a prime sponsor as well and deserves an awful lot of the credit for that particular bill. I felt strongly about that legislation, and I certainly was not happy to see the Supreme Court strike down a portion of that law as unconstitutional. But I respect, as we all must, the Supreme Court's ruling, and we have a duty to take its lesson to heart—whether or not we personally like them.

So there is a serious constitutional concern with S. 625. But, in the frightening climate of terrorism that we live in today, there is a practical consideration that we also cannot ignore. We must ask ourselves what role our Federal law enforcement agencies should play in violent crimes that historically have been prosecuted by State and local officials. The Federal Bureau of Investigation recently has committed a large number of its agents to work exclusively on terrorism cases. The FBI has shifted its focus away from the investigation of general crimes to the protection of our homeland security. In my view, this is a step in the right direction. I sincerely hope that everybody in this body, and both bodies, can all agree about that.

Now, more than ever, we can see the line between what is truly national and what is truly local. The question is not just what can we do, but rather, how should we allocate our scarce Federal resources? And what message will we be sending the FBI—who has committed to focus on terrorism—by passing, as historians will no doubt conclude, the greatest expansion of Federal power over crimes traditionally prosecuted by State and local governments?

I have given a great deal of personal thought to this matter in attempting to create a Federal response to hate crimes that would be as effective as possible without implicating the very serious concerns created by S. 625. The amendment I intend to propose before this matter is over is one that I believe would not only solve the problem effectively and pragmatically, but also has the virtue of resting on unquestionably sound constitutional ground.

I care deeply about this issue and am committed to a strong, workable, practical, and constitutional Federal solution. It is precisely because of my commitment to this issue that—in the 2 years since this issue last came to the Senate—I have changed certain aspects of my amendment to strengthen the Federal Government's role in the investigation and prosecution of hate crimes. So, while S. 625 remains in precisely the same form as it was when it was offered as an amendment to the Department of Defense appropriations bill in June 2000—despite the concerns that were raised about its scope and constitutionality—I have worked to change my proposal to make it more aggressive and more acceptable to the supporters of S. 625.

There are two main components to my amendment. First, I would propose creating a meaningful partnership between the Federal Government and the States in combating hate crimes. My amendment would permit the Justice Department to assist State and local authorities in investigating and prosecuting hate crimes by providing Federal manpower as well as financial assistance. The original version of my amendment had capped the amount of Federal grants at $100,000 per case, but the version I propose today removes that ceiling when the need is greater. My amendment contains a completely new provision that would require the Attorney General to designate one Federal prosecutor in every district to act as the Federal liaison for the State and local prosecutions of hate crimes. That Federal prosecutor, will take an active role in helping States prosecute hate crimes, from seeking Federal wiretaps to Federal search warrants. There simply is no reason to believe that State and local law enforcement officials could not prosecute these sorts of cases effectively with the type of Federal assistance that my amendment provides.

My amendment directly remedies the primary concern of those who advocate broad Federal jurisdiction over hate crimes. Such a broad power grab is required, the argument goes, because State and local jurisdictions often lack adequate funding or resources to effectively prosecute hate crimes. While the record would seem to indicate that States have effectively shouldered the oar on prosecuting hate crimes, I certainly accept the fact that such highly publicized prosecutions might strain a smaller community's resources. My amendment directly cures that potential problem without displacing States from their traditional role in law enforcement.

Let us not fail to note that the overwhelming successful record of local prosecutions of hate crimes—many in jurisdictions where the death penalty not only was available, but also played a central role in securing justice—should stand as a testament to the fact that wholesale Federal intervention is not warranted. There has never been a showing that State and local law enforcement officials have been ignoring or neglecting—much less intentionally failing—their duty to prosecute these heinous offenses. The truth seems quite to the contrary. State and local authorities effectively investigated and prosecuted those who perpetrated the reprehensible murders of Matthew Shepard and James Byrd, Jr. No Amount of federalization—much less the measures called for in S. 625—would have made these persecutions any more successful.

This raises a point that I frankly find somewhat puzzling. During the last floor debates on this issue, Senators KENNEDY, DURBIN, my good friend, and Senator REID from Nevada—good people who I know genuinely care about this issue—kept bringing up the tragic cases of Matthew Shepard and James Byrd as reasons to support S. 625. Yet those offenders were prosecuted efficiently and effectively and, in my view, appropriately with the death penalty, which was actually the sentence imposed on two of the killers of James Byrd. That is something that just couldn't happen under S. 625, which doesn't even provide for the possibility of the death penalty. So, if anything, the Matthew Shepard and James Byrd cases stand as testament to the fact that federalization of hate crimes is both unwarranted and in the case of S. 625, less effective than current state laws.

In any event, before we take the decidedly broad step of making every criminal offense motivated by hatred a Federal crime, we ought to equip States and localities with the resources necessary so that they can undertake these criminal investigations and prosecutions on their own.

The second major component of my amendment proposes to define the problem more precisely. Before we swing a broadsword into the constitutionally sensitive area of States' rights, we ought to consider carefully whether a scalpel might do the trick. There is a pile of raw data that has been collected pursuant to the 1990 Hate Crime Statistics Act, including a comparison of the records of different jurisdictions—some with hate crime laws, others without. We need to undertake a comprehensive analysis of that data to determine whether there is, in fact, a problem in certain States' prosecution of hate crimes.

Some 45 States and the District of Columbia already have enacted hate crimes laws, and by any measure, they are aggressively and effectively prosecuting these cases. I am certainly open to being persuaded that the States are failing to prosecute these crimes. But neither S. 625 nor the record developed in support of this legislation appear to make such a case. Analyzing the statistics that already exist to see whether there is a real, verifiable problem with state and local enforcement of hate crimes is a simple, efficient and responsible first step that we, as lawmakers, should take before enacting such sweeping legislation.

In sum, we have widespread agreement that the Federal Government must play a role in our Nation's efforts against hate crimes. The role we define must also respect the Constitution and the structure of our government—a structure that, since the inception of our country, assigns to the States the primary role in criminal law enforcement.

Rather than take a precipitous step that would potentially make every criminal offense motivated by a hatred a Federal offense, we should equip States and localities with the resources necessary to undertake these criminal investigations and prosecutions on their own. At the same time, we should undertake a comprehensive analysis of the raw data that has been collected pursuant to the 1990 act.

My amendment is a measured legislative response that would accomplish the goal of letting no hate crime go unpunished—without bearing any risk of being struck down as unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. It is legislation that could and probably would pass into law. We know that S. 625, as written has no chance of enactment.

The House will not take this amendments. It simply has too many problems. I hope it is not presented just for political reasons. Instead of having a political issue, we should take a realistic and responsible step toward addressing this problem, which would be passing my version of this legislation.

Mr. President, as we know, on Friday, immediately after calling up S. 625, the hate crimes bill, the Democratic leadership filed for cloture. This was done for the sole reason of thwarting any meaningful debate on a bill that seeks to overhaul and expand thoroughly the role the Federal Government plays in law enforcement.

I agree wholeheartedly that Senator KENNEDY's bill, S. 625, is an important piece of legislation that deserves consideration in the Senate. In the past, I too have introduced competing legislation addressing hate crimes. As someone who has remained as involved in this issue as Senator KENNEDY, at a minimum, I deserve the opportunity to offer amendments relevant to the discussion of hate crimes and to improve this bill. I believe my amendments will in fact improve this bill as it reads currently. Moreover, I believe that a majority of my colleagues not only want to consider these amendments, I believe they would approve of my amendments.

Protecting the safety and rights of all Americans is of paramount concern to all Senators. There are, however, many thoughts as to how to provide this protection. No one is threatening to filibuster this bill. My colleagues and I are honestly trying to force a debate on an issue that affects all Americans. It is curious to me why the Democrats are trying to prevent a substantive debate on hate crimes from going forward. By preventing amendments from being offered and considered, the Democrats are shutting the door on any Republican ideas or alternatives, however constructive they may be.

All Senators have the right to consider thoughtfully legislation that will impact significantly how serious crimes are prosecuted in this country. By filing for closure prematurely, the Democratic leadership is prohibiting Senators the right to debate and have a vote on issues that are important to them and the constituents of their States. It is unconscionable to prevent debate on such an important issue. I ask the Democratic leadership to rethink this position, and I ask Senators to oppose cloture and allow us to consider a reasonable amount of amendments to improve this bill.

I will certainly make every effort to keep the amount of those amendments very limited so that this particular debate does not have to go on and on. I hope we will be able to get that done. I noticed S. 625 not only substantially expands current authority over hate crimes, it adds a number of provisions over what we had at least attempted to do before.

Under current Federal law, it is important to note that it is unlawful to injure, intimidate, or interfere with any person because of his or her race, color, religion or national origin. That is the law today. That has been upheld as constitutional. If the person is participating in certain federally protected activities such as attending school, serving as a juror, traveling in interstate commerce, using public accommodations, or working, that person is protected against injury, intimidation, or interference because of race, color, religion or national origin.

Since 1994, Federal law has required a heavier sentence for persons convicted of hate crimes. We have already gone a long way to do that.

We will put in the RECORD before this debate is over some of the statistics that have been presented as to whether or not hate crimes, as defined narrowly, are really a significant percentage of crimes that are committed in this country. My attitude is, if one is committed, it is a significant percentage, but we have to be practical as well. It seems to me, since there is no showing—at least there has not been up to this date—that the State and local law enforcement jurisdictions are failing to prosecute hate crimes and prosecute them with vigor, it seems to me we are going too far with S. 625.

I hope our colleagues will pay attention. I think we could really wind up not doing as much against hate crimes as we could if we would make a real effort to try to bring both bodies together. I would like to get this problem solved once and for all, and I would like to do it in a way the vast majority of us can support because I think the vast majority of Members of Congress will support a reasonably written, effective hate crime statute that does not take away the responsibilities of the State and local governments and law enforcement people to prosecute these matters.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I say to the distinguished senior Senator from Utah, this legislation has already passed the House—232 Members voted for it; in the Senate, 61, almost identical legislation.

The question was raised as to why there was an effort made to move forward on cloture on this bill. We have lots of things to do. When it was reported in the Congressional Quarterly last Friday morning that they, the Republicans, were going to file 40 to 50 amendments just to slow down the train on this legislation, and they had a wide range of subject matters on all the amendments they were going to file, none of which were related to this hate crime legislation, the majority leader felt we had to move on. That is why the cloture motion was filed.

I also say to my friend, the former chairman of the Judiciary Committee, someone who is certainly knowledgeable of things legal in nature, if cloture is invoked, there is still every opportunity, up to 30 hours, to file any germane amendments. I would say if the Senator wants to improve this legislation, it would have to be with germane amendments, not nongermane amendments. So I hope we can move along. I hope cloture is invoked. The majority leader would be happy to work with the Republicans to come up with legislation they believe is better. But this is a matter that has already moved in both bodies of Congress. We should move forward with it.

AMENDMENT NO. 3807 WITHDRAWN

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I withdraw amendment No. 3807.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right. The amendment is now withdrawn.

Mr. REID. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I would like to speak to this legislation. First of all, I compliment the ranking member on the Judiciary Committee for the points he made, with which I am in agreement. Recall, this bill federalizes two new hate crimes, adding gender and sexual orientation and disability to existing law. It is a far-reaching proposal.

I am sorry, I cannot accept the excuse that has just been proffered by the assistant majority leader with respect to why cloture was filed on this bill some 14 minutes after the bill was brought to the Senate floor. This is unprecedented. With all due respect, I characterize it as a gag rule on Senators, unprecedented in the way the Senate ordinarily, traditionally acts.

As a matter of comity to Members, it is traditional that Members are allowed to debate and offer amendments to legislation. Only rarely is cloture filed—ordinarily, after there has been an attempt to filibuster a bill. The majority then rightly has the opportunity to bring that debate to a close if enough Members are in agreement to do so. It is very rare cloture motions would be filed immediately after bringing the bill to the floor. This does not give Members enough time to debate the bill or offer amendments and have those amendments voted upon. The reason proffered by the distinguished Senator from Nevada was that they had read in a publication that Republican Senators intended to file some 40 amendments to the bill. I suggest that is not appropriate as a reason for immediately invoking cloture. To my knowledge, it has never been done when the Republican majority introduced bills to the floor.

I remember on one occasion a cloture motion was filed almost immediately and there was a great hue and cry from the other side, as a result of which my recollection is the Republican majority, by unanimous consent, extended the time for debate an additional day.

It is, frankly, a breach of the comity that heretofore has characterized the opportunity for debate in this body, to file that cloture motion some 14 minutes after the bill was brought to the floor—especially because this is such controversial legislation. The two votes that previously were cast here were like 50 to 49, and I have forgotten exactly what the other vote was, but this is a highly contentious issue and one which deserves a great deal of thought and debate. I, therefore, am very hopeful our colleagues—whether they agree with the ultimate legislation or not—will agree it is simply unfair to close off debate and amendments at this very early stage of the consideration of such important legislation.

One reason the Senate should not rush to consideration of this bill is because of the very controversial change that it makes to criminalize not a defendant's actions alone, but the defendant's thought process. Think about this for a minute. This legislation focuses not on the defendant's conduct, or even on his intent—on whether he acted purposefully or with knowledge of risk. Rather, this bill criminalizes the defendant's subjective motive. We are moving perilously close, down the path of creating a penalty for thought crimes.

This is not as distant as you might think, considering, for example, the FBI data that is used by advocates of hate crimes laws to justify this bill. In 1999, they report there was a total of 9,430 hate crimes in the United States. Of these, only 19 were murders. By far, the largest category of actual hate crimes against persons, including property crimes and crimes against society, was the crime of intimidation. Yet this crime is so vague and so inchoate that the FBI does not even bother to calculate incidents of intimidation in its overall crime reports.

What exactly does intimidation mean? Does it simply mean something that is perceived as offensive by the hearer? Some groups, in fact, increasingly invoke terms such as "hostile speech" or "climate of violence" to describe speech in favor of traditional morality on social and sexual issues. Would a traditional viewpoint on homosexuality or transsexualism be hostile speech and thus a hate crime? It very likely could be under the definitions here.

One organization, the largest organization of women in the country, the Concerned Women for America, has cited an example of a pastor in New York whose billboard advertisement with a Bible verse on it was taken down by city officials who cited hate crimes principles as the rationale. The CWA also cites a recent incident in San Francisco. The board of supervisors officially approved a resolution urging local media not to run an advertisement by a group.

Again, even those who do not agree with the message of traditional values should at least recognize these groups' right to be heard and to exercise their first amendment right of speech. With this type of legislation, we risk criminalizing this speech.

In addition, it is wrong to treat some victims of violent crimes as more special than others. All victims of violent crime should be equal in the eye of the law. When such a crime occurs, the police should not first have to ask, for example, what the victim's race, religion, or sexual preference is. Nor do the 19 murders classified as hate crimes in the year 2000 nor the 17 in 1999 provide much justification for the legislation when more than 15,000 other murders occurred each year—all crimes under State law. It is not as if we have to add this crime in order to assure there is punishment for people who commit violence.

Congress should be concerned about all of these victims, not about just a subset constituting one-tenth of 1 percent of the total. Yet that is what we spend our time on in this body.

I note that one of the bill's provisions attempts to justify or provide a constitutional rationale for the bill. I note that section 2 states that Congress has found "the incidence of violence motivated by the actual or perceived race, color, religion, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, or disability of the victim poses a serious national problem" and that the "prominent characteristic of a violent crime motivated by bias is that it devastates not just the actual victim and family and friends of the victim, but frequently savages the community sharing the traits that caused the victim to be selected."

I would like to focus on that in two respects.

First of all, it says this is a national problem. But I note that not all national problems are Federal problems. People are murdered every day in this country. That is a national problem. But States provide the laws under which people are prosecuted, and it is ordinarily by a local or county prosecutor. In other words, not every national problem is a Federal problem.

As I will note later, no less than the Chief Justice of the United States has warned Congress against federalizing every crime and finding a Federal solution to every national problem.

But even more important is the suggestion that only certain kinds of crime victims ought to be of concern to us. It said here that this kind of crime devastates not just the actual victim but frequently savages—and I am not exactly sure what the word "savages" means—the community sharing the traits that caused the victim to be selected. I presume that is the class of victims—people such as the victim.

As the Presiding Officer is well aware, Senator FEINSTEIN and I have had a constitutional amendment before this body for several years to grant rights to victims of crime. We have argued all of these years that victims of violent crime feel themselves frequently savaged by a system which gives a lot of rights to the defendant but, at best, ignores their rights, and sometimes actually results in them being victimized a second time by the judicial system by not getting notice of key hearings and procedures in which they would have an interest in attending, or by not even being able to sit in the courtroom sometimes. This clearly is activity that savages the community that has been victimized.

Anybody who has been a victim of domestic violence can empathize with the other victims of domestic violence. I have gone to many meetings at a lot of centers at which women who have been abused are sitting in a circle sharing their experiences in order that they be able to cope with and eventually rise above the problem and to understand that they themselves are not the cause of the crime that has been perpetrated against them. They are savaged, all right. They are a group of people to whom we ought to be paying attention. Yet we can't get the support in this body to grant them the rights that are at least somewhat equal to the rights of the accused perpetrators of the crimes upon them. The numerous constitutional amendments which have granted defendants rights should at least be equal in the constitutional rights of these victims of crimes.

I am going to state this in a rather blunt way. It seems to me to be inconsistent, at best, for people to be very concerned about a couple of specific groups of people—transsexuals or homosexuals, for example—that they would believe that other members of their group would feel savaged when someone else in their group has a crime perpetrated upon them but we wouldn't extend that same feeling and that same support and that same kind of action to a vast and much larger number of people who are victimized by crimes every day and for whom there are no victim's rights. We don't designate them hate crimes, and therefore these people have no such rights. I find it discriminatory.

In this Senate body, we never characterize the motives of legislation. It is a very dangerous thing to do, and I resent it. In no way do I characterize the motives of anyone offering this particular amendment. But I ask them to stop and think for a moment about whether it is fair to single out a very small group of people who have a very large lobbying voice for special protection as victims of hate crimes because the group they are a part of feels savaged when they are the victim of a crime. That is the Federal nexus. That is the basis upon which the constitutionality of this action rests, and I submit it is inadequate under our Constitution. But that is the alleged basis. We will do it there, but we will not give rights to the vast majority of people who are victims of violent crime in this society.

Do we not believe or do we not understand that they feel savaged as well? Is their lobbying voice just not as strong? I don't know what it is. But it is unfair.

Let me turn to two other points before I close.

It is obvious to me from the legislative history—I am not elaborate at this point but just to note this—that using the word "gender" rather than "sex" is a very intentional and very specific choice of words. The bill is intended to take the unprecedented step of making transsexuals and transvestites a federally protected class. There are those who think this is a good idea. I cannot imagine what the Founders—the people who wrote our Constitution—would think of such a provision. But I believe Congress should accept that not all human impulses are necessarily healthy, that not every desire should be pursued, and that, in any event, these kinds of activities should not be singled out as constitutionally protected given the large number of people in this country who have very different points of view of what is right and wrong. We single out minority action I gather as being constitutionally protected because we are concerned about what the majority would do. In so doing, I believe we pervert the language of the Constitution.

That gets to the next point: the constitutional overreach of this bill. The bill is almost certainly unconstitutional and beyond Congress's powers. The first new offense, justified as an exercise of Congress's 13th amendment power to outlaw the incidents of slavery, fails because it is not tied to the exercise of civil rights or access to public accommodations. The second new offense, justified under the commerce clause, goes too far when it punishes noneconomic violent crime simply because of the use of a weapon that has allegedly traveled in interstate commerce.

The bill also unnecessarily contributes to Congress's federalization of criminal law—a point to which I alluded earlier and on which I said I would expand. This is a process that places great burdens on our Federal courts and undermines their role as a forum for addressing uniquely Federal issues.

I mention the Chief Justice of the United States, Justice Rehnquist. He has repeatedly warned the Congress against unnecessarily creating new Federal criminal offenses, especially where the matter has traditionally been addressed and can be addressed by State courts. The Chief Justice expounded on this problem in his 1998 Year-End Report of the Federal Judiciary. I believe this is important enough to quote at length.

He said:

> The number of cases brought to the Federal courts is one of the most serious problems facing them today. Criminal case filings in Federal courts rose 15 percent in 1998—nearly tripling the 5.2 percent increase in 1997. Over the last decade, Congress has contributed significantly to the rising caseload by continuing to federalize crimes already covered by state laws.

The trend to federalize crimes that traditionally have been handled in state courts not only is taxing the Judiciary's resources and affecting its budget needs, but it also threatens to change entirely the nature of our federal system. The pressure in Congress to appear responsive to every highly publicized societal ill or sensational crime needs to be balanced with an inquiry into whether states are doing an adequate job in these particular areas and, ultimately, whether we want most of our legal relationships decided at the national rather than local level. Federal courts were not created to adjudicate local crimes, no matter how sensational or heinous the crimes may be. State courts do, can, and should handle such problems. While there certainly are areas in criminal law in which the federal government must act, the vast majority of localized criminal cases should be decided in the state courts which are equipped for such matters. This principle was enunciated by Abraham Lincoln in the 19th century, and Dwight Eisenhower in the 20th century—matters that can be handled adequately by the states should be left to them; matters that cannot be so handled should be undertaken by the federal government.

As is very clear by the language of the statute itself, that is not the test used for determining whether or not prosecutions will be held by the Federal Government for these crimes.

The Federal courts are already overwhelmed with existing Federal offenses, at the same time that this Senate is dragging its feet on filling the Federal court vacancies that currently exist, or even holding votes on new judges. Yet here we go creating a whole new set of Federal offenses for crimes that are already proscribed by State law. No doubt the Federal judiciary is watching this debate and thinking to itself, about the Congress, "there they go again."

It bears emphasis that the States not only already punish the crimes we are dealing with here as violent crimes; in addition, 45 States and the District of Columbia already have laws punishing hate crimes. What we are doing is creating a double redundancy, a new Federal offense for hate crimes that are already punished in two different ways at the State level.

Nor is it fair to accuse the States of inadequately enforcing their laws in this area. For example, consider the first and third incidents cited in the committee report for this bill involving murder in Humboldt, NE, and in Yosemite Park, CA. The committee report relies on these incidents to supposedly show the need for a new Federal law. But what these incidents show, instead, is how this law is unnecessary and redundant. Indeed, it would punish these offenses less severely than they have been punished under State law.

In the Nebraska crime, prosecutors sought and obtained the death penalty. In the Yosemite case, they are currently seeking the death penalty. Yet had either of these offenses instead been prosecuted under the law envisioned by this bill, the death penalty would not have been an option. The bill provides for no death penalty, even for the most brutal murders. And we call this an appropriate reaction to something we detest so much, something we call a hate crime, that we are willing to bend the Constitution to make it a new Federal offense.

The death penalty would not have been available under this bill, either as a deterrent or as leverage to secure a life sentence during plea bargaining, which is frequently why the death penalty can be successful. So why do we need a Federal law to provide less punishment than is already available under State law?

Finally, this bill would explicitly allow the same defendant to be punished twice for the same crime, based solely on a Federal official's determination that the State sentence that the defendant is already serving has somehow left Federal interests "unvindicated."

Although the Supreme Court has been willing to ignore such double prosecutions, Congress, at least, should recognize the unfairness of allowing a defendant to be tried twice punished twice, by two different courts, for the same crime.

Since I see my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin in the Chamber, and because I have such respect for him, for the sense of fairness that he has exhibited over and over in the Judiciary Committee, on which we both sit, while I know he is an ardent supporter of the legislation, I would just ask him, and other colleagues, with whom I have had good dealings over the years, to acknowledge the fact that it is inappropriate for us to have debate on this important matter cut off so soon after the filing of the bill—14 minutes after the bill was brought to the floor, cloture was invoked—to have very little opportunity to present amendments and to have the nature of those amendments restricted.

I could be wrong, but I have been told by staff that even making these crimes' punishment subject to the death penalty would be ruled not germane. I cannot believe that. But if that is true, it shows you how restrictive the cloture rule would be.

I would ask my colleague, and any others who are supporters of this bill, to consider, on something so important, that we should not be invoking cloture so soon in the process but should allow those of us who have constructive suggestions—as in the case of the alternative mentioned by the Senator from Utah—that those of us who have amendments, including those which I would like to offer, to have an opportunity to debate and offer those amendments, and have them acted upon in the way that has traditionally been done in this body.

If it is the case, as the distinguished assistant majority leader said, that we have a lot of other business that we need to get to, then maybe we should not have brought this particular bill at this time. If it is so important, then we need to have the time to debate it. If it takes a back seat to issues that are more important, then we should not have brought it up at this point. I do not think we can have it both ways.

I would ask my colleagues for the same kind of fairness that has been offered to them when the majority was held by another party, and to give us more time to debate and consider amendments on this legislation, and not to proceed with cloture at such an early time in the legislative process.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Arizona for his kind words. I am in the Chamber with regard to another matter, but I look forward to discussing this issue at a later time.

(The remarks of Mr. FEINGOLD are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

Mrs. MURRAY. Madam President, I join my colleagues today to speak in support of S. 625, the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act.

In every corner of our country, communities have been trying to respond to hate crimes. Despite great gains in equality and civil rights throughout the last century, too many Americans are subjected to discrimination, violence, and even death because of who they are. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has documented over 8,000 incidences of crime motivated by bias in the United States in 2000. Crimes motivated by the victim's race, color, religion, sexual orientation, ethnicity, national origin, disability, or gender. These crimes attack the values and rights of every American, yet today there is no federal law stopping these crimes.

Passing the bill before us will give us more tools to fight this special brand of crime. I am pleased to join with many of my colleagues as a co-sponsor of this important legislation. The legislation we are considering would expand the definition of a hate crime and improve prosecution of those who act out "their hate" with violence. If someone harms any person because of the victim's race, gender, ethnicity, color, religion, national origin, disability or sexual orientation, they will be punished.

It is important to note that the prosecutor would still have to convince a jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the criminal act was motivated by prejudice, and states would be involved in helping to determine whether a defendant would be charged with a Federal hate crime. The bill would also importantly require the FBI to document and report hate crimes committed against women.

Previously the FBI was only required to collect data from crimes committed because of a person's race, religion, sexual orientation, disability and ethnicity. This bill will allow us to know the "who," "what" and "why" so we can work to end these crimes against women.

I know some of my colleagues have argued that the states are doing an adequate job of handling hate crimes on their own, and I commend the States for their efforts, but I believe the Federal government has an important role in this as well. At the Federal level, we already prosecute many crimes that are motivated by prejudice. We need to strengthen these Federal hate crimes laws and increase the role of the federal government in ending this violence.

It wasn't that many years ago that we stood up for equality and justice by forcing the States and private citizens to end segregation and discrimination. Now we must do the same for hate crimes against our citizens.

Madam President, we are a Nation of laws. We are a Nation that respects the individual and individual liberty. We are a Nation that rewards hard work. We are a Nation that tolerates and celebrates our diversity. These are some of our most cherished values. We cannot allow hate crimes to threaten our fellow citizens and undermine our democracy. I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

AMENDMENT NO. 3824

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I call up amendment No. 3824 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 3824.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To amend the penalty section to include the possibility of the death penalty)

On page 10, strike line 14 and all that follows through page 11, line 23, and insert the following:

both;

"(B) shall be imprisoned for any term of years or for life, fined in accordance with this title, or both, if the offense includes kidnaping or an attempt to kidnap, aggravated sexual abuse or an attempt to commit aggravated sexual abuse, or an attempt to kill; and

"(C) shall be punished by death or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or both, if death results from the offense.

"(2) OFFENSES INVOLVING ACTUAL OR PERCEIVED RELIGION, NATIONAL ORIGIN, GENDER, SEXUAL ORIENTATION, OR DISABILITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Whoever, whether or not acting under color of law, in any circumstance described in subparagraph (B), willfully causes bodily injury to any person or, through the use of fire, a firearm, or an explosive or incendiary device, attempts to cause bodily injury to any person, because of the actual or perceived religion, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, or disability of any person—

"(i) shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years, fined in accordance with this title, or both;

"(ii) shall be imprisoned for any term of years or for life, fined in accordance with this title, or both, if the offense includes kidnaping or an attempt to kidnap, aggravated sexual abuse or an attempt to commit aggravated sexual abuse, or an attempt to kill; and

"(iii) shall be punished by death or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or both, if death results from the offense."

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, it remains my view that S. 625 is a misguided invasion into an area historically and constitutionally reserved to State and local law enforcement authorities. But let me say now S. 625 is also flawed on its own merits. One of S. 625's most egregious shortcomings is that while it purports to send a message the Federal Government is going to be tough on hate crimes, it actually threatens to weaken the punishment currently available under many State laws for the perpetrators of violent hate crimes.

In the successful State and local prosecutions of the killers of James Byrd, Matthew Shepard, and Billy Jack Gaither, prosecutors and law enforcement officials in Texas, Wyoming, and Alabama were able to consider seeking the death penalty. So they did. Let's pause to consider why they did so.

James Byrd, who was African American, was beaten unconscious, chained to the back of a pickup truck, and dragged 4 miles down rural roads by men who had links to a white supremacist group.

Billy Jack Gaither, who was gay, was bludgeoned with an axe handle, had his throat slit, and then was thrown on a pile of tires and set on fire by men who cited Gaither's sexual orientation as their motivation for the killing.

Matthew Shepard, who was gay, was kidnapped, beaten so severely that his skull was fractured a half dozen times, tied to a fencepost, and left to die by two men who hated homosexuals.

I have no hesitation in concluding that State and local officials acted appropriately in seeking the death penalty for these most heinous of crimes. In the case of James Byrd, they successfully obtained the death penalty for two of the three defendants. In the case of Matthew Shepard, the possibility of the death penalty led to an early plea bargain that resulted in life sentences for both defendants. And in the case of Billy Jack Gaither, the possibility of the death penalty caused one of the two defendants to plead guilty and testify for the Government at the trial, after which he was sentenced to life in prison. The other killer was eventually convicted and ultimately sentenced to life in prison after the victim's family requested that the death penalty not be imposed.

Right now, in a case currently pending in northern California, State prosecutors are pursuing capital charges against two brothers charged with murdering a gay couple. And there is more. I could go on. I have three charts that show just some of the hate crimes cases prosecuted by State and local prosecutors where the death penalty was used successfully.

The facts speak for themselves, and I will not go through these cases one by one. I ask unanimous consent that the crimes noted on these charts be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Victim	Defendant	Jurisdiction	Facts	Penalty
James Byrd	Lawrence Russell Brewer	Texas	Beat Byrd (an African-American) unconscious, chained him to the back of a pickup truck and dragged him for miles down rural roads.	Death Penalty.
	John William King	Texas	Beat Byrd (an African-American) unconscious, chained him to the back of a pickup truck and dragged him for miles down rural roads.	Death Penalty.
	Shawn Allen Berry	Texas	Beat Byrd (an African-American) unconscious, chained him to the back of a pickup truck and dragged him for miles down rural roads.	Death Penalty Available. Sentenced to life in prison.
Roxanne Ellis and Michelle Abdill.	Robert Acremant	Oregon	Shot Ellis and Abdill (a homosexual couple) to death as they lay gagged in the back of his truck.	Death Penalty.
Vasudev Patel	Mark Stroman	Texas	Shot Patel (an Indian man) after 9/11 because Stroman thought Patel looked Middle Eastern.	Death Penalty.
Billy Jack Gaither	Steven Mullins	Alabama	Bludgeoned Gaither (a homosexual man) with an axe handle, slit his throat, threw him on top of a pile of tires and set him on fire.	Death Penalty Available. Pled guilty. Sentenced to life in prison without parole.
	Charles Butler Jr.	Alabama	Bludgeoned Gaither (a homosexual man) with an axe handle, slit his throat, threw him on top of a pile of tires and set him on fire.	Death Penalty Available. Sentenced to life in prison without parole only because the victim's parents requested that the prosecution not seek the death penalty.
Sasezley Richardson	Jason Powell	Indiana	Fired 12 shots at Richardson (an African-American) in an attempt to "earn" a spider-web tattoo from the Aryan Brotherhood.	Death Penalty Available. Pled guilty and testified for the State in order to avoid the death penalty. Sentenced to life in prison without parole.
	Alex Witmer	Indiana	Drove the truck from which Powell fired 12 shots at Richardson (an African-American) in an attempt to gain acceptance into the Aryan Brotherhood.	Death Penalty Available. Pled guilty. Sentenced to 85 years in prison.
Gary Matson and Winfield Mowder.	Benjamin Williams	California	Shot to death Matson and Mowder (a homosexual couple)	Death Penalty Available. Prosecution ongoing.
	James Williams	California	Shot to death Matson and Mowder (a homosexual couple)	Death Penalty Available. Prosecution ongoing.
Matthew Shepard	Aaron McKinney	Wyoming	Kidnapped Shepard (a homosexual college student), beat him so severely that his skull was fractured a half dozen times, tied him to a fence post and left him to die.	Death Penalty Available. Sentenced to two consecutive life terms. Avoided the death penalty by agreeing not to appeal the life sentences.
	Russell Henderson	Wyoming	Drove the truck into which Shepard (a homosexual college student) was lured, helped tie him to a fence, and, at the very least, stood by while Shepard was beaten senseless.	Death Penalty Available. Pled guilty in order to avoid the death penalty. Sentenced to two consecutive life terms with no possibility of parole.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, none of these results—none of these death-penalty-eligible cases shown on these charts—would have been possible under S. 625—not one of them. This legislation, while federalizing hate crimes, would not allow capital punishment for those who murder savagely out of bigotry, prejudice, or hatred. The practical effect of S. 625 is to substantially weaken existing State law. In fact, even 18 U.S.C. section 245, the current Federal law that specifically addresses hate crimes, provides for the death penalty.

It is truly ironic that S. 625's failure to provide for the death penalty actually represents a decided benefit to those who would commit these heinous crimes, and it takes away some of law enforcement's most important pretrial bargaining techniques in order to get one or more witnesses to these crimes to testify or one or more participants to testify against the others. Not only would this legislation undermine existing State laws, but it would substantially weaken their protections and weaken law enforcement's ability to get to the bottom of some of these crimes. In consequence, this legislation would be less likely to deter future hate crimes as well as many State laws on the books today.

If we as an institution are serious about addressing the problem of hate crimes, then we must permit for the possibility of the death penalty as being the appropriate punishment in some of these cases. If we are to take these sorts of cases away from State and local law enforcement officials who have been doing such a thorough and effective job prosecuting them with the possibility of the death penalty, then our Federal prosecutions must be equally well equipped and prepared to do as good a job as State and local officials have done.

That is why it would only make sense to support my amendment to provide for the possibility of the death penalty in appropriate cases if you support the underlying bill.

I noticed the distinguished Senator from Oregon is here, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Madam President, I have every day put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the details of a hate crime. These are always violent, they are always sickening, but they also happen to an American citizen. They happen sometimes because the victim is black, gay, disabled, female, or even of Middle Eastern descent. And yet they are all Americans. So they ought to have the concern of all in the Senate.

I wish to speak again on the Senate floor about another crime. It is gruesome. It happened just a year ago, and it involved a young Navajo boy by the name of Fred Martinez, Jr. He had gone to a local rodeo. He was openly gay; apparently also transgender; again, of Navajo descent. He was found south of Cortez, CO. He had died after being repeatedly hit on his head with a rock and left in a small canyon, possibly suffering for an extended period of time before dying.

Police investigated this murder as a hate crime. The perpetrator of this crime, who was recently sentenced, allegedly bragged he "bug-smashed a fag."

The victim's mother told the press that she believes her son was killed because he identified himself as transgender. He occasionally dressed as a girl. In the mind of his murderer, Fred deserved to die for such conduct.

I believe the Government's first duty is to defend its citizens against hatred, against the harms that flow from a hate-filled heart. I stand in support of the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 to make sure that should it ever happen again to a Fred Martinez, or anyone else, it will not go unresponded to by law enforcement at every level. That is really what this bill is about.

I have listened to my colleagues and their concerns about this legislation, and I stand to express my disagreement with parts of what they say.

What is the role of the Federal Government? Some have suggested that we have no place here, that this is the role of the local and State law enforcement. I believe the role of the Federal Government is whatever is necessary to make sure that justice is done, not to overtake local and State authorities but to help, to contribute, to backstop, to provide resources, to provide skills that sometimes are uniquely had by the Federal Government.

I just came from a press conference with Sheriff David O'Malley from the State of Wyoming. He was the local law enforcement official who pursued and ultimately helped in the prosecution of the murderers of Matthew Shepard. It was, frankly, his visit to my office, with the mother of Matthew Shepard, Judy Shepard, that persuaded me to take another look at this issue.

Sheriff O'Malley made clear to me that he was a conservative Republican, but he was for Federal hate crimes legislation because he could have used the help. The horror of that young man's murder so galvanized national opinion and the focus of the media that their little Laramie, WY, law enforcement was overwhelmed by the national scope of this tragedy. Frankly, they did end up prosecuting it well, doing it right, convicting these murderers, but his point was the Federal Government should have been able to show up: We could have used the help.

In the case of James Byrd in Texas, another hideous case, where a black man was dragged to death, in that case, because our Federal hate crimes law already covered issues of race, the Federal Government was able to show up to work and were exceptionally helpful in the pursuit and the prosecution of the murderers of James Byrd.

My response then is, what role is there for the Federal Government? Whatever role is necessary to assure that justice is done. I would like to see the Federal Government show up to work and express the great heart and the values of the American people.

As I listen to some of my colleagues' complaints, I frankly think they make, on occasion, some very valid points. But their point should not be against including gays, gender, and the disabled. Their argument is really against the whole category of hate crimes, this Federal law we have had for over 30 years. Since 1968, we have had Federal hate crimes legislation. As I pointed out, it helped in the case of pursuing the murderers of James Byrd. It did not help in the case of Matthew Shepard.

My point to them is, why oppose its expansion? Why don't they go after race, religion, and national origin? If it is good for those categories, why is it not good for these new categories? That is a question I simply have not yet had answered.

Questions as to constitutionality have been raised, and there may be a point I am missing, but this issue has been fully vetted by the U.S. Supreme Court.

In two cases, RBA v. The City of St. Paul, and Wisconsin v. Mitchell, these cases clearly demonstrate that a hate crimes statute may consider bias motivation when that motivation is directly connected to a defendant's criminal conduct. We are not going after speech. We are not going after thought. We are going after conduct.

As with any criminal law, in any criminal act there are elements of the crime. This is yet another element. It is not the crime, but it is an element in making up the category of the crime. By requiring this connection to criminal activity, these statutes do not chill protected speech and do not violate the first amendment. In Wisconsin v. Mitchell, the Supreme Court made clear that:

> The First Amendment does not prohibit the evidentiary use of speech to establish the elements of a crime or to prove motive or intent.

So it seems clear to me that one can say whatever they want about gays, transgenders, and women. They are not prohibited from doing that. If they act on it, that can be an element in determining whether this falls under the Federal hate crimes law.

So those who oppose this, I really think their argument is not towards its expansion but against the law as a category itself. So their amendment should be to get rid of this as a category. I will not be voting for that. I would not suggest anyone do that because I believe our hate crimes law truly does reflect the big heart of the American people. All crime is hateful. That is a given. We grant that. But when an attack is made on a Navajo homosexual boy, and he is thereby a part of a crime which victimizes a much larger community, what is wrong with our saying, as a people, we want every level of government—the local, the State and the Federal Government—to help to pursue and prosecute such crime? I cannot see the problem with it.

I think the argument that is being made is against the whole statute of hate crimes. It should not be made against gays and lesbians, but it is.

I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to the case of Mark Bangerter from Boise, ID. He was the victim of a brutal attack, and he wrote the Justice Department and asked for help in pursuing those who had been hurtful to him.

The Justice Department writes back to him saying:

> Dear Mr. Bangerter: This letter is in response to your report that on April 15, 1998, you were the victim of a vicious attack by an unidentified individual who apparently believed that you were homosexual. According to the information you provided Special Agent Joseph W. Hess, Jr., on May 12, 1998, the attack caused you severe facial injuries and total blindness in your left eye. Your case was thoroughly discussed with the United States Attorney's office in Boise, Idaho, in an effort to explore prosecutive possibilities under existing Federal hate crime laws. I must regrettably inform you that as a result of those discussions, it was determined that sexual orientation does not fall within the listed elements of hate crimes. Therefore, the Federal Bureau of Investigation lacks the statutory authority to investigate the attacks against you. I strongly encourage you to recontact the Boise Police Department and request that an investigation be fully conducted. Sincerely yours.

Had Mr. Bangerter said, please pursue these criminals because I am black, they would have been able to do that. He said, please pursue them because I am gay, and the Federal Government was not able to do that.

I think that is wrong, and the overwhelming heart of the American people calls upon us to expand an existing constitutional law and to cover these people who, because of their minority status, are more likely victims of crime. Again, if there is a problem with this, it says to the whole category of crime it should not be a problem just because we would include these newly identified minority groups in America; they are certainly deserving of the protection of this law, the values behind this law, which frankly are denied to them now and ought not to be any longer.

I am sorry I have to bring our attention to yet another hate crime in this country, but I suggest it is another reason we ought to act and we ought to do so quickly.

Senator HATCH raises a valid point. I am loathe to see this legislation slowed up. I hope the House will take it up. Perhaps the point he is raising can be resolved then. It is important for this Senate to act this week on this issue.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, 95 percent of all criminal activities are prosecuted by State and local law enforcement and are prosecuted well. That is the way it ought to be done. That is what is expected to be done.

Our laws already cover virtually everything, from a civil rights standpoint, that I mentioned earlier today; that is, race, color, religion, and national origin. Do I think gay people ought to be attacked, brutalized, and mistreated? Heavens, no. I believe these matters have been taken care of at the State and local law enforcement levels. If they are not, they should be. We should do that. My amendment that I will offer provides the money, the facilities, and the ability for the State and local law enforcement people to do it if they need extra help.

I do not think a case is made that we should give protective status to anyone other than for race, color, religion, or national origin, unless we can show that State and local law enforcement is not doing its job. If they are not doing the job, I am the first to support, the first to come out and say nobody should be mistreated. The law should cover everyone.

I made the point, however, that under current law, the Matthew Shepard case and the James Byrd case—two of the most flagrant examples of vicious, unforgivable conduct—these cases were handled well by State and local law enforcement. And, because the prosecutors had the death penalty to hold over these defendants, these criminals, these vicious racists, they were able to force some of the witnesses to cooperate, which helped result in a conviction in one of the trials.

In the case of Matthew Shepard, they obtained a guilty plea immediately, and thus, preserved judicial resources and saved taxpayers extensive amounts of money. The guilty plea was entered into to avoid the death penalty. Having that bargaining tool is a crucial part of law enforcement.

This bill does not preserve this tool. That is one of the most glaring defects in this bill.

There are no demonstrated problems with State and local enforcement of hate crimes.

I am aware of only one time when hearings were held on this legislation. Those are the ones that I, as chairman, scheduled in 1999. Deputy Attorney General Eric Holder conceded in his testimony that an analysis of the hate crimes statistics that have been collected needs to be conducted to determine whether State and local authorities are failing to combat hate crimes. Eric Holder testified that the statistics we have are, to use his term, "inadequate."

In fact, there has been never been a showing that state and local law enforcement officials have been ignoring or neglecting—much less intentionally failing—their duty to prosecute these heinous offenses.

Because we don't know the real facts on this critical issue, we have a duty to find out before we pass such sweeping, constitutionally suspect legislation.

I have only learned of a handful of cases—less than a dozen, some of which stretch back almost two decades—where state and local officials are alleged to have failed to investigate or prosecute hate crimes. This is far from compelling evidence in a system of justice where, according to the most recent FBI statistics, citizens report some 11 million criminal complaints in one year, and state and local law enforcement officials make some 14 million criminal arrests.

These numbers make another important point. State and local law enforcement officials process the overwhelming majority of all crimes—some 95 percent of all criminal activity. There are good reasons for that. Frankly, they do every bit as good a job as Federal prosecutors.

If we really want to do something about hate crimes, on a Federal level, we should at the least allow for the death penalty so law enforcement and prosecutors can obtain immediate cooperation and guilty pleas, and so defendants will have an incentive to testify against fellow perpetrators, which results in bringing these matters to an end quickly without high costs.

In most cases, the death penalty would probably not be imposed, but the fact that it could be imposed is a very important element in getting to the bottom of a lot of these cases.

We are talking about a very important set of issues. It is nice to be emotional; it is nice to talk about how big our hearts should be. I don't think anyone can claim they have a much larger heart than I have. I have proven it through all the years. The fact is, there is a reason our Founding Fathers wanted State and local law problems prosecuted by State and local prosecutors. They are the people closest to them; they are the people who understand the neighborhoods; they are the people who understand the cities; they are the people who understand the people. They do every bit as good a job as the Federal prosecutors do.

I feel deeply about these matters. I don't want anyone to be hurt by hate crimes. It is not right. No one should care what their orientation is. It is just not right. I have to say, if the State and local law enforcement people were not doing their job, it would be another matter.

My colleague, Senator SMITH of Oregon, cited an incident in Idaho where the victim asked the FBI to step in and assist in the prosecution. They said they could not because there was no applicable federal statute. As I understand it, there is no allegation that the crime was not prosecuted by State officials. In fact, I understand they received a conviction in that case.

A lot of this is based on emotions. I would like to address the issue from a law enforcement basis that makes sense, that really does the job. That is why I filed this amendment on the death penalty, because that is one of the great tools Federal and local prosecutors have. The very fact that they might have to face the death penalty if they roll the dice and go to the jury, it is one of the great tools that forces people to come clean. It is also a great tool in causing others to testify against their co-perpetrators. Take that tool away and I suggest we will be harming the efforts to try to solve the problems of hate crimes and criminal activity.

What is wrong with this bill? It goes way beyond what is necessary and makes almost every case that is now prosecuted at the State and local level a Federal crime. The fact is that almost all crime involves hatred. I know the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts tried to prevent including every rape as a hate crime. But the bill is written so broadly that it looks to me as though they are making all rape cases, all cases with sexual allegations, hate crimes, prosecutable by the Federal Government, even though the State and local prosecutors are totally capable of prosecuting these cases.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold his request?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Madam President, I would like to state for the record my belief that there is not a Senator in the Senate with a bigger heart or better heart than ORRIN HATCH. It is a great privilege to serve with him. He and I just differ about the appropriateness of the Federal involvement.

I think the Federal involvement in the statute we proposed will be minimal, but it will be allowable. It will be rare that the Federal Government is brought in. But, again, it took a Republican from Wyoming, Laramie, WY, the sheriff, to come and tell me, just in a practical way, how helpful it would have been if Federal resources and involvement had been included in the prosecution of the Matthew Shepard case.

If in the case of James Byrd it was appropriate, why not in the case of Matthew Shepard? Moreover, why should we not, at this time in our Nation's history, say to the gay and lesbian community: We care. We do have a big heart. We have a way to include you. And this is the barest of minimums that we ought to do in their behalf.

I think if you are a Navajo gay boy in a lonely Colorado canyon near a small town where local law enforcement is ill-equipped to assure justice is done, that it is entirely appropriate for us now to make available the law enforcement arm and resource and authority of the U.S. Government.

I do not wish to subvert in any way the local law enforcement that is the bulwark against crime in this country. Indeed, that is why we call this the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act. We are simply trying to enhance the pursuit and prosecution and punishment of those who would commit the most malignant kinds of crime in America.

At a time when this Nation is in a war against terrorism abroad, it is not inappropriate for us to focus as a Congress upon terrorism committed at home. What happened to Matthew Shepard was terrorism. I think it is appropriate for the Federal Government to say it can help in this instance as well.

So if there are flaws in this bill, let's fix them in conference. But let's advance this bill because it is the right time and it is the right way in which to do it.

Again, I deeply respect the motives of the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee. I know his heart. It is as good a heart as there is in the place. I know he feels as I do when people are victimized. I think he is genuinely trying to find the right procedural way to get the Federal Government involved in helping.

But all you have to do is go to small town America where many of these horrible acts are committed and ask them if they couldn't use the helping hand of the Federal Government. I think they will tell you overwhelmingly: Yes, and it is about time you showed up to help.

So I urge my colleagues to vote for S. 625. Now is the time and it is about time. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I appreciate the remarks of my distinguished friend about the way he feels about these matters. I feel precisely the way he does. We are very close friends. I don't think you can find closer friends in the Senate. I think most people who know me know that I have very deep feelings that no one should be brutalized in our society, regardless of what their sexual orientation is.

But this is a big step. If we take this bill without the death penalty, then we are actually reducing the ability of law enforcement to go after these people and to get cooperation from other witnesses and from co-perpetrators.

One of my favorite programs on television happens to be "Law and Order." If you watch that, you will see the prosecutors regularly use the death penalty as a tool. While fictional, this television show is based substantially on what goes on in real life. Most attorneys who watch the show are pretty impressed with the program. I am one of them. You will notice in many cases that they will use the potential of being subjected to the death penalty to get one or more of the perpetrators to testify against the others. Frankly, it is very effective on this show and in real life.

I, for one, believe that the death penalty should be used only in the most narrow of circumstances. But I believe it is a tool that would certainly help in prosecuting hate crimes. It would certainly help almost every prosecutor who wants to go after violent criminals who act in concert. It certainly helps our State and local prosecutors, and it would help the Federal prosecutors. But in this particular bill that has been introduced by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, the death penalty is taken out of the hands of Federal prosecutors.

So all we are doing in this intellectual, political exercise, in many respects, is tying the hands of Federal prosecutors, while immensely expanding the Federal jurisdiction over virtually all crimes that are called "hate" crimes—in complete disregard for the fact that 95 percent of all prosecutions are prosecuted at the State and local level, and are prosecuted well.

I know the distinguished Senator from Oregon cited the Bangerter case. The people who attacked Bangerter and hurt him were prosecuted and convicted, as I understand. There are bound to be maybe four or five cases over the last decades that weren't prosecuted. But that doesn't justify giving this wholesale expansion of state authority to the Federal prosecutors.

One of the things I personally chatted about with the current Chief Justice and other Justices on the Court—one of the things I personally discussed with them—is their concern about the continual increase of the number of statutory Federal crimes when there is no evidence that the State and local prosecutors are not doing their job. The amendment I intend to file at a later time, which will be a substitute for the bill of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, provides for the tools and the help for those small communities, such as the one in Colorado that distinguished Senator from Oregon referred, to prosecute these crimes.

Although there is no evidence that they can't do it or that they aren't doing it, my amendment makes sure that hate crimes will and can be prosecuted by providing resources.

If my friend from Oregon is truly only concerned with enhancing local law enforcement—this bill, ironically, is called the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act. This bill takes away the authority of local law enforcement and puts it in the hands of Federal prosecutors when there is no evidence they need to do that. Nor is there any indication that we should turn over this kind of responsibility to Federal prosecutors, nor that they should have the right to come in and overrule local prosecutors in the process who are doing the job.

If my colleague from Oregon is truly only concerned with enhancement of local law enforcement, I hope he will vote for my substitute which will be offered later in this debate.

That is what my substitute will do—enhance and not supplant local State prosecutors. I will discuss that in detail later, and hopefully we will be able to bring it up and get a time agreement whereby we have a limited number of amendments. And that will certainly be one of them. If we win, we win. If we lose, we lose. But at least we will have debated it, and we will have had a chance to improve this bill by leaps and bounds.

During our last debate on hate crimes, Senator KENNEDY criticized me for arguing against the federalization of hate crimes when I have supported providing Federal jurisdiction in other, completely unrelated areas, such as computer fraud or class actions. This is the classic apples versus oranges argument.

In those other cases, there has never been any serious question that the proposed Federal jurisdiction would be constitutional. I consider every piece of legislation on its own merits.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, a noted opponent of the death penalty, nonetheless has voted in the past for legislation that provides for the death penalty. My conviction that S. 625 is unconstitutional is in no way inconsistent or contradictory.

Whether or not a State may have a specific law prohibiting hate crimes does not mean that they are failing to vigorously prosecute them. Every hate crime, every bit of criminal conduct that S. 625 proposes to federalize is and always has been a crime in every jurisdiction throughout our Nation, crimes which have been effectively prosecuted by State and local prosecutors.

When we challenged the Clinton administration and the then Deputy Attorney General, Eric Holder, to come up with any examples where local prosecutors were not taking care of these problems, they could not do it.

In fact, prosecutors sometimes do not like to charge a crime as a hate crime—especially when the penalties are no different because they have to prove an extra element: The motive of the defendant to commit the crime based on bias. That is an extra element that would have to be proven, and it makes it tough to get convictions in some of these cases.

It is no answer to say that a State may not have a hate crime or may not be charging enough cases under a specific hate crime law. The real question is, Are States failing to prosecute hate crimes? The answer is a resounding no.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. RES. 272

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 5:45 p.m., today, the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 272, regarding the delivery of signatures to the Cuban National Assembly; that the substitute amendment be agreed to; and the Senate vote on the resolution, as amended; that following the vote, the amendment to the preamble be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, as amended, without further action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to it being in order to request the yeas and nays at this time?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I also announce, on behalf of the majority leader, this will be the only vote this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. RES. 282

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, in 3 days' time, the United States will withdraw from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. And it appears that we will do so without a significant debate on this issue in the Senate. For 30 years, the ABM Treaty has been the foundation upon which our strategic relationship with Russia has rested. So I am troubled that this historic treaty is about to be dissolved without so much as a hearing or even any debate in this body. I also regret that the President made this important decision without consulting with the Senate. I find this troubling on both constitutional and policy grounds.

Article II, section 2 of the Constitution states that the President "shall have the Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided that two thirds of the Senators present concur. . . ." The Constitution is silent on the process by which the United States can withdraw from a treaty, and the record of the Congress and the executive branch is mixed.

But, the intent of the Framers, as explained by Thomas Jefferson, is clear. In section 52 of Jefferson's Manual, he writes, "Treaties are legislative acts. A treaty is the law of the land. It differs from other laws only as it must have the consent of a foreign nation, being but a contract with respect to that nation." And article II, section 3 of the Constitution states that the President shall "take Care that the laws be faithfully executed. . . ."

Jefferson continues, "Treaties being declared, equally with the laws of the United States, to be the supreme law of the land, it is understood that an act of the legislature alone can declare them infringed and rescinded. This was accordingly the process adopted in the case of France in 1798." It is worth noting that four signers of the Constitution were serving in the Congress when this first treaty termination occurred—by an act of Congress—in 1798, just 11 years after the Constitutional Convention.

So it is clear to me, as obviously it was to Thomas Jefferson, that Congress has a constitutional role to play in terminating treaties. If advice and consent of the Senate is required to enter into a treaty, this body should at a minimum be consulted on withdrawing from a treaty, and especially from a treaty of this magnitude, the termination of which could have lasting implications on the arms control and defense policy of this country. Today the ABM Treaty is the supreme law of the United States. The Senate should not stand by while the administration unilaterally abrogates this treaty.

I am concerned about the message that the Senate's inaction sends to this administration and future administrations about how seriously we will take our constitutional responsibilities with regard to the termination of treaties. As Jefferson noted, a treaty is equal with a law. A law cannot be declared to be repealed by the President alone. Only an act of Congress can repeal a law. Action by the Senate or the Congress should be required to terminate a treaty.

Momentarily, I will seek to bring up a resolution on this issue. The resolution is very simple. It just expresses the sense of the Senate that the approval of the Senate is required to terminate any treaty and states that the Senate shall determine the manner by which it gives its approval to such a proposed termination. Finally, the resolution disapproves of the withdrawal of the United States from the ABM Treaty.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 282, which I submitted earlier today, that the resolution be agreed to, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table without intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I was not surprised, but I do regret that there has been an objection to the Senate taking up this resolution and expressing its will on this important issue.

I am troubled that the Congress appears willing to cede its constitutional responsibility on this matter to the executive branch. I am concerned about the signal that the Senate's refusal to act sends to the executive branch and what it could mean for the future of other treaties with which this or other administrations may not agree.

The Senate does not grant its advice and consent to ratify treaties lightly, and we should not abrogate our responsibility to express the will of this body on whether the United States should withdraw from treaties. By failing to act on this important issue, we are granting the executive branch undue license to trample on the constitutional prerogatives of the Senate and to blur the separation of powers and system of checks and balances. I am concerned that the Senate's inaction today tips the scales dangerously in favor of the executive branch.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, I would like to be recognized to address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

THE SHAD PROJECT

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, over the course of the last few days, I have learned some rather disturbing news about U.S. servicemen being used as human guinea pigs. It is a project that was carried out in the 1970s aboard ships, the ships in the Pacific, a project known by the acronym of SHAD—S-H-A-D. It was basically using various biological and chemical agents to expose our sailors, supposedly, in an attempt to have a readiness should that kind of an attack occur upon our troops. At that time we were still involved in the Vietnam war.

But with the information that I have received, it is unclear if, in fact, the troops—in this case, the sailors—were told about the test and were, in fact, given the appropriate warnings to get the proper protective gear.

The reason this has come to light—and I want to give credit where credit is due—there is a brave and courageous Congressman in California, Congressman THOMPSON, who has been railing about this issue. But it has recently come to my attention because several of those now retired sailors are being notified by the U.S. Government that they should come in and get examined medically, and some of those former sailors are in the State of Florida.

Now, here is the extent of it. There were some 113 tests that were made. The only ones that have been released thus far are some 12 of the 113 tests. According to the sources I have, in those 12, there were a total of 4,300 sailors who were exposed to these chemical and biological agents that were sprayed on or over the ships in the Pacific in the 1970s. Of those 4,300 sailors, only 622 have been notified and have been notified by mail.

By the way, how it came to my attention is 51 of those 622 happen to reside in the State of Florida.

This, in and of itself, portends some very serious consequences for our country. As a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, I want to know, now some three decades later, that we are contacting these sailors to come in and get checked medically. I want to know the details.

I want to know who were the military personnel, were there any civilian personnel, and were there any substances we should know about so that we could give the kind of medical care that would be important as the U.S. Government ought to be protecting the people, particularly the people who served in uniform trying to protect this country.

When this came to my attention last week, I wrote to the Secretary of Defense and asked him for an explanation. I have written to our wonderful chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Senator LEVIN, and asked him to conduct an inquiry and hearing, if necessary, and if it needs to be classified, then we can operate in the Armed Services Committee in a classified manner to find out what the degree of exposure was and what the degree of medical attention should be in order to protect these American citizens.

If that is not enough, I have also had my suspicions aroused because in the 1950s there was a test going on in the old Boca Raton airbase. This was an airbase that during World War II was a training base for flyers. After World War II, in the 1950s, there was research going on at this particular airfield to develop a toxin that would attack and kill the Soviet wheat crop.

Remember, in the 1950s we were immersed in the cold war. We didn't know what to expect. We had the two nuclear superpowers. We were investigating: Could we develop a toxin that, if the United States were attacked, with which we would be able to attack their agricultural supply.

Why was that done in Florida? Well, we don't raise wheat in Florida. So that is one of the reasons Florida was chosen. But in addition to the Boca Raton location, there were other field tests made not only for wheat but perhaps for other substances that I have been able to find out about just in the State of Florida, in locations such as Belle Glade, Fort Pierce, Avon Park, and Panama City.

A couple of months ago, I wrote to the Department of Defense and asked for information about this matter, along with the same line of inquiry which I have just spoken about with regard to SHAD, the gassing of the sailors in the 1970s. I wanted to know: Were people at risk? Were military personnel exposed? Were civilians exposed? And on the 85-acre parcel to the north of what is now Florida Atlantic University, built on the Boca Raton airport, a part of the old airbase, an 85-acre area to the north where this testing was going on, were there toxins that were dumped there? Were there toxins buried there?

Basically, to my inquiry to the Department of Defense a couple months ago, they said they could not tell me because it was classified. Well, the Senate Committee on Armed Services is not only capable but is quite experienced in handling highly classified matters of the Government. The Defense Department had better be forthcoming to let us know if there is a problem, and if there is, what we are going to do about it.

These two issues have come up in the last few days and have certainly aroused my suspicions. I call on the good offices of the Secretary of Defense, who I think personally is doing a very good job, to see that his organization snaps to and produces the documentation the Senate needs in its oversight capacity.

VARELA PROJECT

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, in just a few minutes we will have a vote on a resolution, thanks to the chairman of our Western Hemisphere Subcommittee, Senator DODD, and the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. He so graciously, for me, has set this vote in just a few minutes on a resolution that passed out of the Foreign Relations Committee unanimously commending, as a Senate resolution, the very courageous citizens in the country of Cuba who have put their lives on the line by putting their names and addresses on the line under the Cuban Constitution, petitioning for free elections, petitioning for freedom of speech, petitioning for a release of political prisoners, petitioning to move from a state-controlled economy to an economy of free enterprise. Those 11,000 courageous citizens, operating under the Constitution of Cuba, stepped forth under the constitutional provision that says if over 10,000 petition the Government, the Government will take up the matter in the National Assembly to act on those four freedoms I just mentioned.

I want to bring to the attention of our colleagues the fact that these people have put their lives on the line. The Castro government could stop it tomorrow. But today the Senate will send a strong message of support for these courageous citizens of Cuba who are playing by the rules and who want to see the winds of change and the fresh breath of freedom suddenly start to be realized in Cuba.

I am so grateful to the chairman of the full committee and the chairman of the subcommittee that they have brought forthwith so quickly this resolution so that the Senate can stand on record to commend these citizens in Cuba.

I see my colleague, the chairman of our subcommittee, ready to speak. Few people knew about this project called the Varela Project until President Carter went to Cuba. When he had that chance to speak live to the Cuban people by radio and TV, he spoke about the Varela Project and how courageous these folks were. All the people of Cuba now know what it is. Today, the Senate is going to have a chance to go on record to support them.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, there are only a few minutes before the vote. What time is the vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is 5:45.

Mr. DODD. I see my colleague from the State of Washington who wants to address another matter. I will be brief.

I commend our colleague from Florida for crafting this resolution, which will be voted on shortly, by the Senate. He is absolutely correct, it did come out of our committee with a unanimous vote.

Mr. President, I rise in support of S. Res. 272. All too often when we have engaged in debate on matters related to Cuba, there have been a great deal of polemics—a lot of heat but very little light shed on the subject matter under debate. That is not the case with the resolution we are considering this afternoon.

I have been critical in the past on various policies the U.S. has pursued regarding Cuba. The audience we ought to listen to most are the people behind the projects like the Varela Project, the people who have stayed in Cuba to try to bring about change there—those who have been incarcerated for 15, 20, 25 years, in some cases longer—because of their political views. Those who have authored this Varela Project deserve a great deal of credit for having the courage to round up 11,000 signatures, which is remarkable considering some of the pressures they will be under.

I commend Senator BILL NELSON of Florida for crafting this resolution. He has attempted to stick to the facts and to keep the spotlight on what is actually happening on the Island of Cuba.

This resolution recognizes a remarkable occurrence—the fact that 11,000 Cubans have petitioned their government for the holding of a referendum on civil, political and economic changes they wish to see. It is also refreshing that, thus far, the government of Cuba has taken no action against the organizers of this effort.

Thanks to the recent visit of former President Jimmy Carter to Havana last month, the Varela project now has international visibility. More importantly, because President Carter's speech, including references to this effort, was broadcast on Cuban TV and radio, and reprinted verbatim in the official Cuban newspaper, the Cuban people are now aware of this as well.

The organizers of Varela have chosen to exercise their rights under the Cuban Constitution to submit legislative proposals to the National Assembly for its consideration. Some in the Cuban exile community have been critical of this effort because they believe it legitimizes the Cuban constitution and therefore it should be opposed. I reject that argument.

For too long we in the United States have tried to tell the Cuban people what is best for them. We did so at the time of Cuban independence from Spain and we did so again during the Batista regime. The result was the 1959 Cuban revolution and the Castro Government.

Let's listen to the voices inside Cuba. Let's listen to those who have stayed in Cuba and sought to change it from within.

Those voices have called for the United States to engage with Cuba. Those voices have called for an end to the travel ban.

If the Carter visit demonstrated anything, it demonstrated that the presence of Americans in Cuba offers opportunities for more political space in Cuba not for shoring up the Castro regime.

Mr. President, the Varela project was inspired by Cuban citizens. These citizens have taken advantage of rights provided to them under the Cuban Constitution. The Cuban government should honor those rights and give serious consideration to this request.

We in the United States should demonstrate self restraint and allow Cubans to retain ownership of this initiative. We need to be careful not to appropriate these internal efforts inside Cuba. If we give it too much of a label of "made in the U.S.," then this project will be hurt and the effort will be hurt. We have been warned repeatedly by dissidents and human rights activists inside Cuba that, too often, if we become associated with efforts there, they are seen as nothing more than tools of United States foreign policy with regard to Cuba. We should try not to give the Castro government any opportunities to suggest that this is just another plot by the United States to attack the Cuban people.

I commend the organizers of the Varela initiative and all who have joined with them in their effort to seek peaceful change in Cuba. I stand ready to listen to their voices and assist them in any way they believe will be helpful in bringing their aspirations to fruition.

What is most important is not what we do, but rather what they are doing in Cuba, what they are showing by their tremendous sense of commitment to democracy and freedom. For those reasons, we are endorsing their effort with this resolution, and I strongly support it and urge its adoption.

I yield the floor.

WAR POWERS AND THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST TERRORISM

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, today I would like to address one of the most complicated but ultimately one of the most important constitutional questions confronting this country as we respond to the atrocities of September 11: that is, the question of how America decides to go to war. This is no easy issue, but it is one that Congress is duty-bound to address.

As we know, war powers are purposefully divided under our Constitution. Under Article I, Section 8, Congress has the responsibility to declare war, and to raise and support the Armed Forces. The President, under Article II, Section 2, is the Commander in Chief, which gives him responsibility for leading the Armed Forces. The War Powers Resolution of 1973 fulfills the intent of the Framers of the Constitution by providing a framework for balancing these powers, and thereby ensuring that the collective judgment of both the Congress and the President will apply to the introduction of the Armed Forces into hostilities, or into situations where imminent involvement in hostilities is likely.

In April, I had a chance to chair a hearing, in the Constitution Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee to consider this balance of war powers authority under the Constitution, particularly as we move forward with our fight against terrorism. In the hearing, there was much praise for the respect demonstrated by President Bush, this

President Bush, for both the Congress and the Constitution in seeking congressional authorization to respond with appropriate force to the attacks of September 11. The language in that authorization, Senate Joint Resolution 23, paralleled some of the careful oversight provisions contained in the use-of-force resolution that former President Bush obtained before launching Operation Desert Storm in 1991. In those two cases, both Presidents took the important and constitutionally mandated step of obtaining congressional approval for an expansive new military operation. And in both cases, I do believe, congressional support strengthened the President's response.

History demonstrates that respect for our Constitution and for the shared war powers authority of Congress is politically practical. Indeed, as our Founders and many subsequent commentators have recognized, the separation of war powers between the two branches of government wisely forces us to develop a broad national consensus before placing our Nation's young people in harm's way. And as we have seen time and again, the United States is indeed the most formidable military force on this planet, provided our soldiers are entrusted with a clear military goal, and through congressional authorization, with the popular mandate that is needed to back them up.

Senate Joint Resolution 23, which was passed by both Houses of Congress and signed into law by the President in the aftermath of September 11, provides the President with statutory authorization to prevent related acts of terrorism. In adopting the use-of-force resolution, the President recognized that Congress he said, "acted wisely, decisively, and in the finest traditions of our country." The resolution demonstrated that Congress has the capacity to fulfill its constitutionally mandated responsibility, and in so doing Congress can help unify the nation in a time of national crisis.

Under the careful structure of S.J. Res. 23, the President now has statutory authority to prevent future terrorist attacks by responding with force against any nations, organizations or persons responsible for planning, authorizing, aiding or harboring the terrorists who were responsible for the September 11 attack. Now, given the unprecedented nature of the threat, this provides a pretty broad mandate to the President to respond militarily.

But this Congressional action, while admittedly broad, is not a blank check. The Resolution limits the President's authority in two essential respects.

To begin, the authorization is limited to situations where there is a connection to the events of September 11. The hearing in the Constitution Subcommittee considered the scope of such a limitation. As I will discuss at greater length, there was widespread agreement in the hearing that absent a clear finding that a state such as Iraq participated in, aided, or otherwise provided support for those who attacked the United States on Sept 11, the President would not be authorized, under the terms of S.J. Res. 23, to take new military action against Iraq. Senate Joint Resolution 23 does not provide unlimited authority to the President to take military action against all bad actors. At the same time, the authorization does foresee broad actions against those responsible for the September attack on the United States.

It is also important to recognize that S.J. Res. 23 states in no uncertain terms that the 1973 War Powers Resolution will continue to apply to our military operations against terrorism. This conforming language is identical to Public Law 102–1, which provided the authorization to use military force to oust Iraq from Kuwait in 1991. In all cases, the War Powers Resolution requires the President to consult with Congress on an ongoing basis on the status, scope, and duration of the hostilities. These consultations need not and should not provide Congress with what would be somehow a meddlesome and unacceptably dangerous role in determining tactical aspects of an active military campaign. But the required consultations must nonetheless assist Congress in its continuing responsibility to evaluate and make ongoing decisions about the broad objectives of an unfolding military operation.

The war powers consultations to date, in my view, have been inadequate. While the administration has taken significant steps to increase the frequency of briefings for Members of Congress, and we do appreciate that those consultations have been conducted as informational briefings, with little opportunity for substantive policy discussions or meaningful give-and-take. As such they do not in most cases reach the threshold level of consultations under the terms of the War Powers Resolution.

The House Report on the 1973 War Powers Resolution notes that "a considerable amount of attention was given to the definition of consultation. Rejected was the notion that consultation should be synonymous with merely being informed. Rather, consultation in this provision means that a decision is pending on a problem and that Members of Congress are being asked by the President for their advice and opinions and, in appropriate circumstances, their approval of action contemplated." The increasingly frequent meetings with Secretary Rumsfeld, Secretary Powell, and others, while welcome and appreciated, do not reach this level of consultation.

In addition, under the War Powers Resolution; the need for additional notification is triggered whenever U.S. Armed Forces are equipped for combat and introduced into a new foreign territory, or if additional Armed Forces are equipped for combat and introduced in numbers that substantially expand existing, previously authorized troop strengths. This is obviously relevant to some of the concerns coming up today.

These and other requirements do not apply to military training exercises, which is why the President must be clear about the precise role of U.S. forces in a number of ongoing counterterrorism training exercises in different countries. These requirements do not apply to that. In some cases, these counterterrorism training programs may cross the line into counterterrorism combat support, which would trigger the War Powers Resolution. So the President must provide clear information to help distinguish between these two types of antiterrorism activities. United States interests are not served through a shortsighted attempt to dodge congressional oversight by characterizing counterterrorism support as routine military training.

In the hearing before the Constitution Subcommittee, we also discussed the important provision within the War Powers Resolution that recognizes the immediate flexibility provided to the President to introduce U.S. Armed Forces into hostilities in the case of a national crisis created by an attack on the United States, or its territories, possessions, or Armed Forces. This provides the President with the flexibility to respond immediately to defend United States interests during an emergency.

But again, this is a limited exception. The War Powers Resolution specifically requires the President, "in every possible instance," to consult with Congress before introducing Armed Forces into situations where hostilities appear imminent. And even within this exception for emergency situations, the President must still seek congressional authorization within 60 days to sustain the operation.

My conclusion from the hearing on war powers authority within the context of our fight against terrorism is that to date the President has shown respect for Congress in seeking authorization to respond to the attacks of September 11. But the ongoing level of consultation on our military campaign has not been adequate. In particular, additional attention must be given to the distinction between counterterrorism training and counterterrorism support for foreign troops during these consultations. It is clear that our national interests would be well served by sustained and forthright consultations between Congress and the President over these aspects of our military response to September 11.

The hearing also touched on one of the most important military decisions on the horizon. Several witnesses questioned the authority of the President to take military action against Iraq. The witnesses generally assumed that any strike against Iraq would be designed to defend the United States against Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, and that the President would not assert a direct link between Iraq and the September 11 attacks. As I have indicated, absent such a link between Iraq and September 11, witnesses suggested that the President might advance two legal justifications for taking up arms against Iraq without further, additional congressional authorization. But both justifications ring hollow, and rest on highly questionable legal grounds.

During the hearing, a witness from the Justice Department joined other witnesses in highlighting the authority of the President to launch military attacks as a form of preemptive self-defense. This expands the national emergency exception under the War Powers Resolution by asserting that the President must have the authority to act quickly and decisively to prevent a potential attack on United States interests. Now, few would disagree with the assertion that the President must have the authority to launch a preemptive strike in advance of an imminent attack on the United States. This understanding I think fits within the overall spirit and intent of the 1973 War Powers law, and it would be irresponsible to suggest otherwise. But the preemptive self-defense argument does not necessarily fit squarely with the situation in Iraq today.

Various press reports suggest that President Bush is considering plans for a new military campaign against Iraq sometime next year. If the President does plan to take such action next year, there is still plenty of time for the administration to initiate meaningful consultations with Congress over the necessity and scope of this new military campaign.

Some have also argued, unconvincingly to me, that consultation with Congress would be impossible because a preemptive strike against Iraq would require a high degree of stealth. But the administration has already spoken publicly of the need for regime change in Iraq, and unnamed officials have consistently leaked information to major news sources describing the scope of the proposed operation.

Moreover, it is now widely assumed that the operation would require a robust ground assault, and that our military build-up in the region would be both deliberate and plainly obvious to any careful observer. So this would not be a purely stealth operation. There would be ample time for congressional consultation as we move forward with fairly obvious military preparations for such a large offensive.

The second argument that is sometimes advanced to support a future military operation in Iraq is that Public Law 102-1, authorizing the use of force in 1991 to respond to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, still provides ongoing congressional authorization for a major new strike against Iraq. Now, this is a more complex legal argument, but it fails on both legal and public policy grounds. To begin, the congressional authorization for Operation Desert Storm authorizes the President to use military force pursuant to United Nations Security Council Resolution 678. The clear intent of the Security Council in adopting Resolution 678 was to free Kuwait from Iraqi occupation, not to bring about regime change in Iraq. Moreover, United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 implemented a final cease-fire between Iraq, Kuwait and the United Nations Member States that participated in Operation Desert Storm. Although Iraq has certainly failed to comply with the terms of the cease-fire, that failure does not in itself provide automatic authority for the President to launch a significant new military campaign, with the entirely new objective of regime change in Baghdad.

My conclusion, then, is that absent a clear finding that Iraq participated in, aided or otherwise provided support for those who attacked the United States on Sept 11, the Constitution requires the President—it requires the President—to seek additional authorization before he can embark on a major new military undertaking in Iraq.

Since it is clear that Iraq has not adequately complied with weapons of mass destruction resolutions adopted by the Security Council, and that the Iraqi leadership continues to commit gross human rights violations against its own people while encouraging terrorist attacks abroad, the consultation and debate over our response to an Iraqi threat may well convince a majority in Congress that the United States must in fact take all necessary steps, including military action, to limit Iraq's capacity to produce weapons of mass destruction. My guess is that such a resolution would succeed, after a good Congressional debate. If this emerges as the shared decision of Congress and the President, the President would act from a strong and constitutionally unified position in launching a new military campaign. Indeed, the Constitution and the American people must demand such a unified response.

Why would I raise these issues today? Why are these war powers questions so important? Why should following the letter of the War Powers Resolution be so important in the midst of this national crisis? I think it should because Congress and the President have a chance to carry out their duties with regard to war and peace in the way the War Powers Resolution dictates, and also in the way the Framers of the Constitution intended.

That kind of cooperation preserves our constitutional structure. It also increases the moral authority of the President to act forcefully. Given the unprecedented nature of the threats confronting us, and the complex environment within which we must respond to those threats, a powerful and constitutionally unified response remains essential. We must also remember that constitutional unity presents both a stronger international image of the United States to our friends and foes, and, at the same time, a more comforting image of U.S. power to many of our close allies in the campaign against terrorism. When we best honor our Constitution and our laws as they relate to the powers of war and peace, we also best prepare our Nation to defend that Constitution and those laws. We owe our Nation no less.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

AMERICA'S COMMITMENT AGAINST BIOTERRORISM

Mr. FRIST. Madam President, our vulnerability to a bioterrorist attack was highlighted by the events that unfolded last October, when anthrax took the lives of innocent Americans and put thousands more in jeopardy. How we address our vulnerabilities and respond to bioterrorism will be radically improved as a result of new legislation signed by President Bush. The greatest tool that terrorists have in their arsenal is to play on America's vulnerabilities and fears. This legislation makes great strides to significantly improve our ability to respond to bioterrorist threats. Yet it is critical that we provide the appropriate information so that families can prepare and protect themselves in the event of a potential attack. Information is power, and by better preparing ourselves, we can avoid being paralyzed by fear.

Many news organizations have already begun to do their part by providing the necessary information for communities to feel safe. Good Housekeeping, which is read by thousands of readers each month, is a good example. In its April edition, Good Housekeeping answered the questions readers often have about bioterrorism, gave suggestions families could use to protect and prepare themselves, and provided information on what Congress is doing to lessen our vulnerability to bioterrorist attack. The magazine went a step further by providing a form readers could fill out urging Congress to act quickly to address bioterrorism. I was pleased that thousands of readers did respond with their views on this issue and the importance of passing legislation that would keep American families safe.

Last fall's anthrax attacks changed the way America looked at bioterrorism. Overnight, the fear of bioterrorism moved from a remote possibility, to a reality for which we must be prepared. The bioterrorism bill, which will soon be signed into law, will greatly improve our ability to respond to a biological threat, equipping communities with the tools they need to strengthen our local health centers and educate those first responders, the doctors, nurses and emergency personnel on the front lines. But information for the general public is also key to improving our readiness. I commend the many news organizations that have recognized this fact and continue to get Americans the information they need to feel safe and secure. The unique nature of terrorism requires all of us to work together. While the events of September 11 and the subsequent anthrax attacks have changed the world we live in, coming together to meet a common challenge remains the American way.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ESTONIA'S ROLE IN THE HOLOCAUST

• Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I ask that an article written by the U.S. Ambassador to Estonia, Joseph M. DeThomas, be printed in the RECORD. Ambassador DeThomas outlines important steps for the Estonian government to undertake to address Estonia's role in the Holocaust.

The article follows.

PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

(By Ambassador Joseph M. DeThomas)

In every interview I have had with the press since I arrived in Tallinn, I have been asked in one form or another, "What has surprised you about Estonia?" I have always answered by noting that some aspect or another about Estonia was even more positive than I expected. Early May, however, I was surprised in a different way. A report in a Russian weekly claiming that Simon Wiesenthal advocated a boycott of the Baltic States and Ukraine produced a firestorm of comment from the press, political circles, and some members of the public. The comments were angry, defensive, and—with regard to my government's position—erroneous. The Wiesenthal Center has categorically denied that Mr. Wiesenthal ever even gave this interview. I did not intervene in this discussion. Since arriving here, I have learned a very useful Estonian proverb, "Think nine times, speak once." I have used the intervening days since the story broke to think nine times about the past and what would be useful to do about it in the present. I would like to share my views.

First, let me make clear my own government's position. We believe there is more for all of us to do to deal with the crimes of the past, and the Holocaust is a crime of unique proportions. A prominent political leader here implied last week that the United States is satisfied that Estonia has done all it needs to do to deal with the Holocaust. Just last month, however, Heather Conley, the Department of State's senior official responsible for the Baltic States called on the Baltic States to do more to deal with the damage from the Holocaust. The same is the case for the U.S. Senate. For example, recently, Senator Biden, the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, made a very strong statement about his concern about the resurgence of anti-Semitism in Europe and called on all countries aspiring to NATO membership to ensure that "the very ugly remnants of war-time fascism . . . be totally and permanently suppressed."

Estonia's World War II past was uniquely painful. The country and its people were not given the freedom to choose between good and evil. Terrible choices had to be made. Estonia suffered terribly under two periods of Soviet occupation as well as the Nazi German occupation. The fact that the Soviet occupation did more direct harm in Estonia, however, does not negate the fact that the Holocaust happened here too. As the conclusions of the Estonian International Commission for Investigation of Crimes Against Humanity demonstrated, some Estonians bear responsibility for participating in this evil. I believe all countries that lived through the nightmare of the last century need to deal with their crimes honestly and completely so that they cannot be repeated in the future. We must face history, not hide from it.

What does this mean with regard to Estonia's approach to the Holocaust? I suggest the following very modest steps:

1. Do justice where justice is needed. Since reindependence, no Estonian has been prosecuted for crimes committed during the Holocaust. In part, that may be because many were prosecuted during the Soviet period. But, there are still Estonian candidates for prosecution. These individuals should be pursued with the same vigor with which the state still pursues those suspected of Soviet crimes. And the time for this is now. The World War II generation is passing from the scene. Witnesses to the crimes are dying. Both the victims and the victimizers should see justice done before it is too late.

2. Recognize the Holocaust is part of Estonia's history. Compared to the other Baltic States, the states of Central Europe and even some neutral states during World War II, the Holocaust is less recognized as a part of the national history in Estonia. The Holocaust took place here. About one thousand Estonian Jews and even more non-Estonian Jews were murdered in this country. Yet, the day of remembrance for the Holocaust, Yom Hashoah, receives almost no notice in this country. Many sites involving Holocaust crimes here are not marked or remembered. A few sites have recently been commemorated. This should continue.

3. Teach our children about the past. I have been told Estonian school textbooks treat the Holocaust in about one-and-a-half pages. If this is true for most of Estonia, I would suggest that history texts on this subject already in other states in this region be translated into Estonian for use here. I understand such a step is already under consideration by the government. I hope that the Estonian Government follows the call of some Estonian NGO's to be more involved in the Task Force for International Cooperation on Holocaust Education, Remembrance and Research, to which 11 nations belong.

The evil of racism and anti-Semitism does not grow again and again because the decent majority advocates it actively. It returns because it is ignored or trivialized by the majority until it reemerges in a new generation. Estonia has emerged from a desolate past into a present full of promise, thanks to the work of its people. But, to ensure a positive future, I believe it essential that the country address all aspects of the past soberly, respectfully, honestly and with justice.•

TRANSITION TO DIGITAL TELEVISION

• Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I rise today to direct my colleagues attention to the technological changes and developments going on in the television industry. Many people have said that the transition from analog to digital television broadcasts is the biggest innovation in TV since color television. Having seen a digital broadcast, it is as if you are watching the program or sporting event in person. I believe consumers will want to bring this technology into their homes.

I do not believe that we have yet discovered the full use of digital broadcast signals, but I do know that it has the potential to change the way people interact with their TVs. Imagine being able to participate in realtime with a game show on television or being able to "chat" with other viewers from around the country during a show. DTV may provide the platform for a more interactive television experience.

I am particularly interested to see how these technologies can be employed to allow local stations to better serve local communities. For the past half-century, local broadcasters have provided valuable services to their local communities. When disasters strike, important, life saving information is often disseminated over the airwaves. Local stations also keep residents informed of community political issues, thereby engaging citizens in the local democratic process.

Since its inception, the broadcasting industry has been founded on two important concepts: the idea of localism and the idea that broadcasting should be free, and over-the-air. I am proud to say that a number of Georgia stations are working to ensure that they continue to serve local communities with free, over the air signals in the digital era.

In my state, we have digital television stations up and broadcasting in four communities. In Atlanta seven stations have digital signals on the air: WAGA, WATL, WGCL, WPXA, WSB, WTBS, and WXIA. In Savannah WTOC is on the air in digital; in Augusta WFXG and WRDW–TV are broadcasting in digital, and in Columbus, WLTZ and WXTX are serving Georgia viewers with digital television. These Georgia broadcasters have taken the next step in television, and for that I commend them. The transition to digital can be expensive, particularly for smaller stations.

To broadcast in digital, these businesses have invested in new transmission equipment and, in some cases, new broadcast towers. If they choose to produce their own digital content, like digital local news, they must invest in digital cameras and editing equipment. Finally, once their digital signal is on-the-air, the stations must pay the bills to transmit two signals simultaneously to ensure viewers can receive both a digital and analog broadcast.

Despite the expenses, these Georgia stations have recognized that digital television is the future. I am confident that their investment in digital television will pay off and I commend them for leading the digital television charge.•

TRIBUTE TO THE CARDINAL CHAPTER OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

• Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, today I thank and honor the Cardinal Chapter of the American Red Cross of Henderson, Kentucky for the selfless and tireless work they performed in aiding the victims of the April 28th tornado which tore through Webster County, Kentucky.

Early Sunday on the morning of April 28th, an F3 classified tornado, with winds up to 200 miles per hour, violently forced its way through Providence, KY hitting at least 114 homes, completely destroying 32. In the end, 26 people were taken to the hospital. In just a few moments, Mother Nature had struck a blow against this normally quiet and peaceful town. People were left without homes and without adequate clothing and food supplies. They were also left without a sense of hope. However, this empty and lonely feeling would be short-lived. Volunteers from the Cardinal Chapter of the American Red Cross of Henderson, KY arrived on the scene just a few hours after the tornado passed through Providence.

Once on the scene, these volunteers wasted no time in setting up two shelters in Providence, providing victims with a roof, a hot meal, and a shoulder to cry on. They also sent food trucks to the nearby town of Irvington once they found out its residents were still without electricity hours after the storm had passed. Without the immediate assistance of the American Red Cross, many would have been left hungry without a home or clothing.

I aks that my fellow colleagues join me in thanking these men and women for their unwavering dedication and commitment to their fellow citizens. They willingly gave up their time and left their families in order to be there physically and emotionally for people they have never met before. I believe we all can learn something from their exemplary behavior. Sometimes it takes the worst to bring out the best, and I think this was the case on April 28.•

HONORING SOUTH CAROLINA'S DEBORAH CHAMBERS

• Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I want to pay tribute to an outstanding resident of South Carolina, Deborah A. Chambers. Ms. Chambers will soon complete her year as national president of the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists, AANA. I am pleased one of our state's own was tapped as the 2001-2002 president of this prestigious organization.

The AANA represents 28,000 practicing Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists. They administer more than 65 percent of the anesthetics given to patients each year in the United States. They provide anesthesia for all types of surgical cases and are the sole anesthesia provider in over two-thirds of rural hospitals.

Debbie has been a nurse anesthetist since 1981. She received both her anesthesia training and master's degree at the Medical University of South Carolina, in Charleston. She has been a solo practitioner since 1993 at the Microsurgery Center in Anderson, as well as in both the Greenville Memorial Medical Center and the Saint Francis Bon Secours Hospital System in Greenville. She also was the Clinical Coordinator at the Medical University of South Carolina School of Nurse Anesthesia at Greenville Memorial Medical Center from 1988–2000. Even with her demanding schedule, she has continued to be active on pharmaceutical advisory panels to advance the practice of anesthesia.

Debbie has held various leadership positions in the AANA, and has used her experience and knowledge to help others. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Deborah Chambers.•

TRIBUTE TO THE THIRD RECONNAISSANCE BATTALION

• Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I rise today in recognition of the dauntless history, honor, and tradition of the 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion, U.S. Marines, whose lineage traces back nearly 60 years of valiant service to our great Nation.

The contribution of the 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion is embodied in the sign placed on top of the Battalion Mess Hall at Camp Reasoner which reads: "We Lead the Division—Where the Division Goes We've Been!"

While enjoying brief periods of respite, it was formed in September 1942. It was sent immediately to the Pacific Theater and participated in World War II campaigns at Bougainville, Solomon Island, Guam, and Iwo Jima. It was reactivated in March 1952 and deployed to Camp Gifu, Japan and later to Camp Hauge, Okinawa. Being reactivated again in April 1958, it was assigned to the 3rd Marine Division, Fleet Marine Force. During Vietnam the unit was highly decorated with four Medals of Honor, 13 Navy Crosses, 86 Silver Stars, and many Purple Hearts awarded to Marines and Sailors. Additionally, the unit itself was awarded President Unit Citations, the Navy Unit Commendation, the Meritorious Unit Commendation, and earned other praise and recognition, as well.

While the 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion has existed under different designations, its adherence to whatever mission assigned is without question. We cannot take lightly their meritorious service to our Nation. Nor, can we ever forget their admirable and routinely valiant actions both individually and collectively. They were not only pivotal to a successful combat effort, but to establishing and maintaining the legacy for which the 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion may be justifiably proud.

I join in expressing the respect, admiration, and grateful appreciation of our nation as members of the 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion Association gather for their reunion next month in Arlington, VA.•

FDA CONSOLIDATION AT WHITE OAK

• Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to continue to work for full funding of the Food and Drug Administration, FDA, consolidation and improvement at White Oak, MD in fiscal year 2003. I strongly believe that ensuring the safety of America's food and drug supply is a matter of national security. Yesterday, Senator HATCH and I offered then withdrew an amendment that we hoped would have provided the funding needed for this project which is vital to ensure the safety of America's food and drug supply. We are told that the our amendment would have increased the cost of the homeland security supplemental appropriations bill. However, we have been assured that Senators DORGAN and CAMPBELL, the chair and ranking members of the Treasury General Government Appropriations Subcommittee, are committed to looking at trying to help to continue to find a way to fund the FDA consolidation at White Oak as a part of the fiscal year 2003 appropriations process.

Why is completing this project vital? FDA's mission is to review and regulate more than $1 trillion worth of products, many of which are vital to human health. FDA cannot fulfill its mission because FDA has to work in obsolete facilities that are not equipped to handle today's advanced laboratory and administrative functions. Currently, over 6,000 FDA employees are scattered among 40 different buildings at 20 different locations in the Greater Washington, D.C. area. These facilities are being consolidated into one integrated facility at the former U.S. Naval Surface Weapons

Center. Not only will the consolidation greatly improve FDA's operating efficiencies, but timely construction of the new facilities also will save approximately $32 million per year in commercial lease costs. We need consolidate FDA on one campus, just like the NIH and the CDC, in order for the FDA to take its place alongside these institutions as a world class health and food research and safety facility.

What is FDA's role in national security? The recent anthrax attacks on U.S. citizens have heightened FDA's critical role in ensuring the safety of our food and drug supplies. Indeed, the FDA is on the front lines of this effort and must have proper, modern facilities to enable them to best perform their mission. The consolidation will provide state-of-the-art laboratories and facilities for that mission.

What is the status of the project? Congress has already appropriated $146 million for the first phases of this vital project, fiscal year 2000, $35 million; fiscal year 2001, $92.1 million; fiscal year 2002, $19.06 million. Construction has started on phase I, the laboratory for FDA's Center for Drug Evaluation and Research. However, approximately $450 million is still needed to complete this vital project.

Why is full funding important? This project has already been delayed due to funding cutbacks. If the General Services Administration's fiscal year 2003 construction request for FDA consolidations is not fully funded, completion of the consolidation will be delayed even further. These delays will add considerably to the overall cost of the project due to inflation and other factors. For example, scheduled to be constructed in phase III is the Center for Devices and Radiological Health, CDRH. The CDRH laboratories are badly in need of improvements, but FDA has been holding off such work in anticipation of building new laboratories as part of the consolidation. Further delay, we are advised, would likely necessitate FDA's spending several million dollars renovating the existing CDRH laboratories. These would be non-recoverable costs.

What is the next step? We hope that your colleagues will agree that, from the perspectives of public safety and fiscal responsibility, we can not afford to delay the timely completion of this project. We hope that our colleagues will support full funding for FDA consolidation in fiscal year 2003. I look forward to continuing to work with my colleagues, Senators HATCH, DORGAN, and CAMPBELL toward completing this project which will provide better security of two of the most essential daily needs of all Americans, our food and drugs.•

TRIBUTE TO JIM MAYER

• Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to a man whose leadership is only surpassed in value to me by his friendship. Twenty-five years ago, Mr. Jim Mayer played an important role in the creation of an innovative pilot program called "Leadership VA."

The program is designed to identify 70 leaders in the Department of Veterans Affairs each year, and to provide an enrichment of their career development through an intense leadership training experience. In its 25 years of existence, Leadership VA has laid a foundation for a network of VA leaders who share a deep commitment to the Department of Veterans Affairs and to public service in its broadest sense. Today, 63 percent of all Central Office Senior Executive Service members have completed the program, as have 73 percent of all field leaders.

This success, though, did not happen by chance. Rather, it is a tribute to the hard work and forward thinking of Jim Mayer. Jim began his VA career as Special Assistant for Vietnam Veterans Affairs to Administrator Richard L. Roudebush in 1974, six years after beginning his service in the U.S. Army as an infantry man in the 25th Division in Vietnam.

Jim joined the Leadership VA staff as its Executive Director in April of 1998, but his relationship with LVA goes back to his time on the first Selection Committee in 1978.

Throughout his years at the VA, Jim has spent countless hours working on behalf of veterans, striving to better conditions by improving the VA from within, but his accomplishments are not limited to his time at the VA. He is a recipient of numerous awards including: 1977, VA Meritorious Service; 1981, VA Exceptional Service; 1991, Secretary of Veterans Affairs Outstanding Volunteer; and, 1993, George Washington Honor Medal from the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge for work as a volunteer with Desert Shield/Desert Storm injured at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

For as long as I have known him, Jim Mayer has exemplified the term "public servant." He is a selfless individual who has always thought of his country before thinking about himself. In this day and age, few people live that type of life, but, as President Theodore Roosevelt said, "The test of our worth is the value of our service."

I would like to thank Jim for his service, his dedication, and, above all else, for his friendship. He is an inspiration and a great American.•

CHAPLAIN TONY FIRMAN RETIRES FROM FLANDREAU INDIAN SCHOOL

• Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize and honor Chaplain Tony Firman on the occasion of his retirement as Chaplain at the Flandreau Indian School in Flandreau, SD.

Chaplain Firman has completed 35 years as Chaplain at Flandreau Indian School. After receiving his training at Blue Cloud Abbey in Marvin, South Dakota, Tony served at Flandreau Indian School as Student Coordinator of Religious Activities, a boys counselor, and as a religious liaison between the students, staff and administration, area churches and the Flandreau community.

He was selected as Flandreau Indian School Chaplain by representatives from the Association of Christian Churches, which is made up of representatives from each of the following denominations: United Presbyterian Church, United Church of Christ, United Methodist Church, Lutheran Church in America, Episcopal Church, Catholic Church, Rapid City and Sioux Falls Dioceses, Reformed Church in America, and Christian Church Desciples. The Flandreau Chaplaincy program was the first project to be sponsored by the Association of Christian Churches.

On the occasion of his retirement as a school Chaplain, I want to congratulate Tony Firman for his tireless dedication to Flandreau Indian School, his commitment to finding the best in students, for helping others with spiritual guidance, and for coordinating and supporting religious activities. I also commend him for his valuable service to the community over the years.

The lives of countless young people have been enormously enhanced by Tony's talent and skill as Chaplain. The State of South Dakota is a better place because of his commitment to and passion for working with local youth. His achievements will certainly serve as a model for other talented religious leaders throughout our State to emulate.

I wish Tony Firman the best on his retirement.•

HONORING THE LADY GAMECOCKS FOR WINNING THE NCAA TRACK TITLE

• Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, my colleagues who have heard me debate fast track trade negotiating authority in the last month may be surprised with what this senator from South Carolina is about to say. But I rise today wishing to scream my lungs out in favor of fast track that is the fast track of the University of South Carolina women's track and field team, who just won the NCAA title earlier this month. It only goes to show you that fast track is alive and well in my state, so long as it's the right fast track.

I have followed Gamecock sports for more than seven decades. This day is particularly pleasing in that, as hard as this is to believe, it is the first time South Carolina has won a national championship ever, in any sport, women's or men's.

I wish to congratulate the entire team of incredible athletes who worked hard all year to prepare for this. They won relays. They won individually. They set new records, piling up points with depth in several of the events. It was a real team effort, as it should be.

I especially want to congratulate the Gamecock coach, Curtis Frye, who recruited all these talented women and turned the program into a true powerhouse. He was just named the women's track coach of the year, and us faithful will obviously expect him to win that title every year now.

One last point, as the Gamecocks are showing their best ever performances on the field, they also are showing their best ever performances in the classroom. It is important that we have champions across the board, in academics and athletics, and I salute all University of South Carolina athletes who have improved their academic performance.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DASCHLE (for Mr. HARKIN (for himself and Mr. CRAIG):

S. 2605. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to geographically adjust the amount of the Medicare part B premium based on the use of health care items and services in the State in which the Medicare beneficiary resides, and for purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

(At the request of Mr. DASCHLE, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

● Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, there are few programs that are more important to the health and quality of life of Americans than Medicare. It has been a godsend for millions of Americans. It deserves our strong support. We need to make sure that Medicare is strong, secure and improved for the future.

The biggest gap in Medicare's coverage is its lack of help with the high costs of prescription drugs. I feel strongly that we must move forward to provide seniors with an affordable, reliable Medicare prescription drug benefit this year. I call on our leadership to bring legislation to the floor so that we can provide seniors with much needed relief.

Another area that is in urgent need of improvement is the fairness of the distribution of Medicare's payments and costs throughout the states. The Medicare program is placing seniors and health care providers in certain States at a severe disadvantage compared to other States. There are currently unjustifiable inequities in the system that affect the way in which both seniors and health care professionals are treated. Rather than rewarding States with healthy populations, that have efficient, high quality health care practices, and practice health care cost containment, the Medicare system is punishing these States.

For example, seniors enrolled in the Medicare program pay monthly part B premiums of $54 across the United States. Medicare part B premiums are set by law to cover 25 percent of total national Part B spending regardless of where one lives or how many services one uses. However, data provided by the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission, Medpac, shows that the amount of part B services seniors use state by state varies significantly, from 70 percent of the national average to 128 percent of the national average. This is because in States like Iowa seniors lead healthier lifestyles and use fewer health care services and we have excellent health care providers who have always practiced efficient, conservative medicine. I believe that a health population, and an efficient health care system, should be rewarded under the Medicare program; however the system has been established to achieve quite the opposite.

Not only do seniors in my State have higher Medicare part B premiums because of the higher number of services seniors receive in other states, health care providers in my State are receiving the lowest reimbursement levels in the country. Iowa health care providers receive $3,053 on average per beneficiary, while the national average is $5,490, and the highest state receives over $7,000 per beneficiary. Senator CRAIG and I, along with a host of our colleagues, have introduced a bipartisan bill called the Medicare Fairness in Reimbursement Act, S. 1020, that would reduce this unjustified disparity that serves to punish the health care providers in our states year after year. Under the FAIR Act, no state would be under 95 percent of the national average, and no state would be over 105 percent of the national average. A similar adjustment would be made for the part B geographic payment indices.

We must work to alleviate the disparity that exists between states under the Medicare program, before we drive those states into a crisis. We can no longer ignore the direct and critical connection between provider reimbursement under the Medicare program, and access to high quality health care for our seniors.

That is why today I am pleased to be joined by my colleague Senator CRAIG of Idaho in introducing legislation to increase fairness in Medicare part B premiums for seniors. Monthly Medicare premiums would be set at 25 percent of projected total Medicare Part B costs for each state, rather than nationally. For example, Minnesota seniors utilize the least amount of part B services, 70 percent of the national average. As a result, under our bill seniors in Minnesota would pay a monthly premium of $38, instead of the current national premium of $54. Seniors in my home State of Iowa use 75 percent of the national average of part B services, and therefore, under this bill they would pay a monthly premium of $41, rather than $54.

Our legislation is budget neutral. It would simply set Medicare premiums based on state level costs rather than an aggregated national cost figure.

It is common sense. If a person in Iowa goes out and buys car insurance, or health insurance for themselves, they will pay different premiums than someone buying insurance in New York or California. It's time for the Medicare program to stop punishing those States that have healthy seniors and efficient health care providers.

We need to restore greater fairness in Medicare's payment among the 50 States. However until we achieve greater equity, seniors in low cost States should not have to bear an unfair portion of health care costs. Senator CRAIG and I will be working to get this issue addressed as a part of Medicare reforms this year. I urge my colleagues to review this important new proposal and to join us in working to achieve its passage.●

By Mrs. BOXER:

S. 2606. A bill to require the Secretary of Labor to establish a trade adjustment assistance program for certain service workers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mrs. BOXER. Madam President, today I am introducing legislation to make truckers eligible for Trade Adjustment Assistance, TAA. A similar provision was in the original Finance Committee package of trade legislation that we recently considered in the Senate. Unfortunately, this provision was removed in last minute negotiations.

Currently, Mexican trucks that bring goods into the United States must transfer those goods to an American truck at the border. On June 30, 2002, that will change. Mexican trucks will be allowed into the country, and as a result, hard-working Americans will lose their jobs. Future trade agreements may make the problem even greater. However, these laid-off truckers will not be eligible for TAA.

TAA exists out of recognition that our decision on trade in Washington causes very specific groups of American workers to lose jobs. TAA provides those workers with the assistance they need to successfully transition to new jobs.

New trade rules that allow foreign truckers to operate in the United States beginning June 30, 2002 will cause an American trucker to lose his or her job just as much as new trade rules cause a textile worker to lose his or her job. Providing TAA assistance to both of these groups of workers is right because neither lost their job through any fault of their own—both will have lost their job as a result of new rules we create in Washington.

American union truck drivers are some of the hardest working and finest paid in the world. They make about $50,000 a year as a starting salary and receive great benefits. And nonunion drivers make $35,000 to $40,000 a year plus benefits. Compare these figures with the salaries of foreign truckers that will now operate in the United States or going to operate in the United States in the near future. Mexican drivers make dramatically less than American truckers, about $18,000 a year at best and few benefits. They are also allowed to drive recklessly long hours at that low pay. American truckers cannot compete with that. Those who lose their jobs as a result of this new competition allowed for by trade law should have access to TAA assistance.

The legislation I am introducing will direct the Secretary of Labor to establish a program to provide TAA assistance to any domestic operator of a motor carrier who is adversely affected by competition from any foreign owned or operated motor carrier. The act also directs the Secretary of Labor to report to Congress within 2 years on adversely affected service workers and recommend legislation that the Secretary considers appropriate for extending TAA to service workers as well.

The TAA program will remain inadequate as long as any workers are losing jobs directly as a result of trade agreements and not getting the help they need to participate in the new economy. The trade debate has not adequately considered the fate of those who lose from trade. It is our responsibility to make sure that these hard-working Americans have a voice in this debate and that they and their families are able to reap the rewards of trade instead of just suffer its consequences.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2606

Whereas the 193rd Special Operations Wing, under the command of Brigadier General Steve Speer, which is the most deployed active or reserve Air Force or Air National Guard unit in the United States, deployed to central Asia in September 2001 to provide one-of-a-kind psychological warfare resources to Allied commanders in Operation Noble Eagle/Enduring Freedom, with 900 members of that unit serving the cause of freedom and liberty valiantly;

Whereas the 28th Infantry Division of the Pennsylvania Army Guard, under the command of Major General Walt Pudlowski, has provided units and soldiers recently to operations in central Europe as part of KFOR and SFOR Balkans stabilization efforts and central Asia in the war on terrorism;

Whereas soldiers and units of the 28th Infantry Division, under the direction of Brigadier General Wesley Craig, have begun preparing for future tasks as one of the first active or Guard units to transform into an Interim Brigade Combat Team, part of the Army's future objective force;

Whereas elements of the 28th Infantry Division, under the command of Brigadier General John von Trott, will become the lead headquarters element of SFOR based at Eagle Base Tuzla, Bosnia, with approximately 1,100 soldiers of the Pennsylvania Army National Guard deploying as peacekeepers for six months; and

Whereas approximately 2,000 soldiers of the Pennsylvania Army National Guard, including soldiers from the 55th Brigade, the 1-213 ADA, the 876 EN, and numerous additional units from across the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, will soon deploy as primary components of Task Force Keystone, providing enhanced security for United States forces based at NATO facilities in Germany, Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, and Italy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress commends the soldiers and airman of the Pennsylvania National Guard, under the command of the Pennsylvania Adjutant General, Major General William B. TITLE —HELPING EFFICIENT, ACCESSIBLE, LOW COST, TIMELY HEALTH CARE (HEALTH)

SEC. 01. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) Findings.—

(1) Effect on health care access and costs.—Congress finds that our current civil justice system is adversely affecting patient access to health care services, better patient care, and cost-efficient health care, in that the health care liability system is a costly and ineffective mechanism for resolving claims of health care liability and compensating injured patients, and is a deterrent to the sharing of information among health care professionals which impedes efforts to improve patient safety and quality of care.

(2) Effect on interstate commerce.—Congress finds that the health care and insurance industries are industries affecting interstate commerce and the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States are activities that affect interstate commerce by contributing to the high costs of health care and premiums for health care liability insurance purchased by health care system providers.

(3) Effect on federal spending.—Congress finds that the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States have a significant effect on the amount, distribution, and use of Federal funds because of—

(A) the large number of individuals who receive health care benefits under programs operated or financed by the Federal Government;

(B) the large number of individuals who benefit because of the exclusion from Federal taxes of the amounts spent to provide them with health insurance benefits; and

(C) the large number of health care providers who provide items or services for which the Federal Government makes payments.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this title to implement reasonable, comprehensive, and effective health care liability reforms designed to—

(1) improve the availability of health care services in cases in which health care liability actions have been shown to be a factor in the decreased availability of services;

(2) reduce the incidence of "defensive medicine" and lower the cost of health care liability insurance, all of which contribute to the escalation of health care costs;

(3) ensure that persons with meritorious health care injury claims receive fair and adequate compensation, including reasonable noneconomic damages;

(4) improve the fairness and cost-effectiveness of our current health care liability system to resolve disputes over, and provide compensation for, health care liability by reducing uncertainty in the amount of compensation provided to injured individuals; and

(5) provide an increased sharing of information in the health care system which will reduce unintended injury and improve patient care.

SEC. 02. ENCOURAGING SPEEDY RESOLUTION OF CLAIMS.

A health care lawsuit may be commenced no later than 3 years after the date of injury or 1 year after the claimant discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the injury, whichever occurs first. In no event shall the time for commencement of a health care lawsuit exceed 3 years, except that in the case of an alleged injury sustained by a minor before the age of 6, a health care lawsuit may be commenced by or on behalf of the minor until the later of 3 years from the date of injury, or the date on which the minor attains the age of 8.

SEC. 03. COMPENSATING PATIENT INJURY.

(a) UNLIMITED AMOUNT OF DAMAGES FOR ACTUAL ECONOMIC LOSSES IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.—In any health care lawsuit, the full amount of a claimant's economic loss may be fully recovered without limitation.

(b) ADDITIONAL NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—In any health care lawsuit, the amount of noneconomic damages recovered may be as much as $250,000, regardless of the number of parties against whom the action is brought or the number of separate claims or actions brought with respect to the same occurrence.

(c) NO DISCOUNT OF AWARD FOR NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—In any health care lawsuit, an award for future noneconomic damages shall not be discounted to present value. The jury shall not be informed about the maximum award for noneconomic damages. An award for noneconomic damages in excess of $250,000 shall be reduced either before the entry of judgment, or by amendment of the judgment after entry of judgment, and such reduction shall be made before accounting for any other reduction in damages required by law. If separate awards are rendered for past and future noneconomic damages and the combined awards exceed $250,000, the future noneconomic damages shall be reduced first.

(d) FAIR SHARE RULE.—In any health care lawsuit, each party shall be liable for that party's several share of any damages only and not for the share of any other person. Each party shall be liable only for the amount of damages allocated to such party in direct proportion to such party's percentage of responsibility. A separate judgment shall be rendered against each such party for the amount allocated to such party. For purposes of this section, the trier of fact shall determine the proportion of responsibility of each party for the claimant's harm.

SEC. 04. MAXIMIZING PATIENT RECOVERY.

(a) COURT SUPERVISION OF SHARE OF DAMAGES ACTUALLY PAID TO CLAIMANTS.—In any health care lawsuit, the court shall supervise the arrangements for payment of damages to protect against conflicts of interest that may have the effect of reducing the amount of damages awarded that are actually paid to claimants. In particular, in any health care lawsuit in which the attorney for a party claims a financial stake in the outcome by virtue of a contingent fee, the court shall have the power to restrict the payment of a claimant's damage recovery to such attorney, and to redirect such damages to the claimant based upon the interests of justice and principles of equity. In no event shall the total of all contingent fees for representing all claimants in a health care lawsuit exceed the following limits:

(1) 40 percent of the first $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(2) 33⅓ percent of the next $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(3) 25 percent of the next $500,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(4) 15 percent of any amount by which the recovery by the claimant(s) is in excess of $600,000.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The limitations in this section shall apply whether the recovery is by judgment, settlement, mediation, arbitration, or any other form of alternative dispute resolution. In a health care lawsuit involving a minor or incompetent person, a court retains the authority to authorize or approve a fee that is less than the maximum permitted under this section.

SEC. 05. ADDITIONAL HEALTH BENEFITS.

In any health care lawsuit, any party may introduce evidence of collateral source benefits. If a party elects to introduce such evidence, any opposing party may introduce evidence of any amount paid or contributed or reasonably likely to be paid or contributed in the future by or on behalf of the opposing party to secure the right to such collateral source benefits. No provider of collateral source benefits shall recover any amount against the claimant or receive any lien or credit against the claimant's recovery or be equitably or legally subrogated to the right of the claimant in a health care lawsuit. This section shall apply to any health care lawsuit that is settled as well as a health care lawsuit that is resolved by a fact finder.

SEC. 06. PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Punitive damages may, if otherwise permitted by applicable State or Federal law, be awarded against any person in a health care lawsuit only if it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that such person acted with malicious intent to injure the claimant, or that such person deliberately failed to avoid unnecessary injury that such person knew the claimant was substantially certain to suffer. In any health care lawsuit where no judgment for compensatory damages is rendered against such person, no punitive damages may be awarded with respect to the claim in such lawsuit. No demand for punitive damages shall be included in a health care lawsuit as initially filed. A court may allow a claimant to file an amended pleading for punitive damages only upon a motion by the claimant and after a finding by the court, upon review of supporting and opposing affidavits or after a hearing, after weighing the evidence, that the claimant has established by a substantial probability that the claimant will prevail on the claim for punitive damages. At the request of any party in a health care lawsuit, the trier of fact shall consider in a separate proceeding—

(1) whether punitive damages are to be awarded and the amount of such award; and

(2) the amount of punitive damages following a determination of punitive liability.

If a separate proceeding is requested, evidence relevant only to the claim for punitive damages, as determined by applicable State law, shall be inadmissible in any proceeding to determine whether compensatory damages are to be awarded.

(b) DETERMINING AMOUNT OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—

(1) FACTORS CONSIDERED.—In determining the amount of punitive damages, the trier of fact shall consider only the following:

(A) the severity of the harm caused by the conduct of such party;

(B) the duration of the conduct or any concealment of it by such party;

(C) the profitability of the conduct to such party;

(D) the number of products sold or medical procedures rendered for compensation, as the case may be, by such party, of the kind causing the harm complained of by the claimant;

(E) any criminal penalties imposed on such party, as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant; and

(F) the amount of any civil fines assessed against such party as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant.

(2) MAXIMUM AWARD.—The amount of punitive damages awarded in a health care lawsuit may be up to as much as two times the amount of economic damages awarded or $250,000, whichever is greater. The jury shall not be informed of this limitation.

(c) NO CIVIL MONETARY PENALTIES FOR PRODUCTS THAT COMPLY WITH FDA STANDARDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—No punitive damages may be awarded against the manufacturer or distributor of a medical product based on a claim that such product caused the claimant's harm where—

(A)(i) such medical product was subject to premarket approval or clearance by the Food and Drug Administration with respect to the safety of the formulation or performance of the aspect of such medical product which caused the claimant's harm or the adequacy of the packaging or labeling of such medical product; and

(ii) such medical product was so approved or cleared; or

(B) such medical product is generally recognized among qualified experts as safe and effective pursuant to conditions established by the Food and Drug Administration and applicable Food and Drug Administration regulations, including without limitation those related to packaging and labeling.

(2) LIABILITY OF HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS.—A health care provider who prescribes a drug or device (including blood products) approved by the Food and Drug Administration shall not be named as a party to a product liability lawsuit involving such drug or device and shall not be liable to a claimant in a class action lawsuit against the manufacturer, distributor, or product seller of such drug or device.

(3) PACKAGING.—In a health care lawsuit for harm which is alleged to relate to the adequacy of the packaging or labeling of a drug which is required to have tamper-resistant packaging under regulations of the Secretary of Health and Human Services (including labeling regulations related to such packaging), the manufacturer or product seller of the drug shall not be held liable for punitive damages unless such packaging or labeling is found by the trier of fact by clear and convincing evidence to be substantially out of compliance with such regulations.

(4) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply in any health care lawsuit in which—

(A) a person, before or after premarket approval or clearance of such medical product, knowingly misrepresented to or withheld from the Food and Drug Administration information that is required to be submitted under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) or section 351 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 262) that is material and is causally related to the harm which the claimant allegedly suffered; or

(B) a person made an illegal payment to an official of the Food and Drug Administration for the purpose of either securing or maintaining approval or clearance of such medical product.

SEC. 07. AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENT OF FUTURE DAMAGES TO CLAIMANTS IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any health care lawsuit, if an award of future damages, without reduction to present value, equaling or exceeding $50,000 is made against a party with sufficient insurance or other assets to fund a periodic payment of such a judgment, the court shall, at the request of any party, enter a judgment ordering that the future damages be paid by periodic payments in accordance with the Uniform Periodic Payment of Judgments Act promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—This section applies to all actions which have not been first set for trial or retrial before the effective date of this title.

(A) this title does not affect the application of the rule of law to such an action; and

(B) any rule of law prescribed by this title in conflict with a rule of law of such title XXI shall not apply to such action.

(2) Application of title to certain actions.—If there is an aspect of a civil action brought for a vaccine-related injury or death to which a Federal rule of law under title XXI of the Public Health Service Act does not apply, then this title or otherwise applicable law (as determined under this title) will apply to such aspect of such action.

This title does not preempt or supersede any law that imposes greater protections (such as a shorter statute of limitations) for health care providers and health care organizations from liability, loss, or damages than those provided by this title.

(1) any State statutory limit (whether enacted before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this title) on the amount of compensatory or punitive damages (or the total amount of damages) that may be awarded in a health care lawsuit, whether or not such State limit permits the recovery of a specific dollar amount of damages that is greater or lesser than is provided for under this title, notwithstanding section 3(a); or

(2) any defense available to a party in a health care lawsuit under any other provision of State or Federal law.

SEC. 011. APPLICABILITY; EFFECTIVE DATE.

GENERAL PROVISION, THIS CHAPTER

SEC. 101. ASSISTANCE TO AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS THAT HAVE USED WATER FOR IRRIGATION FROM RIO GRANDE RIVER. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall use $10,000,000 of the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to make a grant to the State of Texas, acting through the Texas Department of Agriculture, to provide assistance to agricultural producers in the State of Texas with farming operations along the Rio Grande River that have suffered economic losses during the 2001 crop year due to the failure of Mexico to deliver water to the United States in accordance with the Treaty Relating to the Utilization of Waters of the Colorado and Tijuana Rivers and of the Rio Grande, and Supplementary Protocol signed November 14, 1944, signed at Washington on February 3, 1944 (59 Stat. 1219; TS 944).

(b) AMOUNT.—The amount of assistance provided to individual agricultural producers under this section shall be proportional to the amount of actual losses described in subsection (a) that were incurred by the producers.

(c) EMERGENCY REQUIREMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The entire amount necessary to carry out this section shall be available only to the extent that an official budget request for the entire amount, that includes designation of the entire amount of the request as an emergency requirement under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 900 et seq.), is transmitted by the President to Congress.

(2) DESIGNATION.—The entire amount necessary to carry out this section is designated by Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of that Act (2 U.S.C. 901(b)(2)(A)).

SEC. 102. Not later than 14 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall carry out the transfer of funds under section 2507(a) of the Food Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–171).

SEC. 103. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON COMPENSATION TO PRODUCERS OF POULTRY AFFECTED BY AVIAN INFLUENZA. It is the Sense of the Senate that the Secretary of Agriculture act expeditiously to provide compensation through the Commodity Credit Corporation to producers of poultry that have been affected by outbreaks of avian influenza in Virginia, West Virginia, and other States which have resulted in the destruction of poultry flocks in order to contain this disease.

SEC. 104. (a) FINDINGS.—(1) Of the 40 million people living with HIV/AIDS, nearly 2.7 million are children under 15, and 11.8 million are young people aged 15–24, more than 540,000 children were infected in mother-to-child transmission in 2000, and a baby born to an HIV-positive mother has a 25 to 35 percent chance of becoming infected.

(2) Targeted provision of dairy products for HIV/AIDS mitigation provides an economical and efficient means to strengthen nutrition, ward off infectious diseases and extend the lives of HIV-positive individuals.

(3) Good nutrition including dairy products is critical to programs that provide and enhance anti-retroviral drugs to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV/AIDS, and nutrition experts recommend the use of dairy products with anti-retroviral drugs to combat mother-to-child transmission.

(4) In the diets of young children, growing adolescents and pregnant women, milk has been proven to provide a concentration of critical nutritional elements that promote growth and robust health, and the National Institutes of Health (NIH) recommends that dairy products be used to boost the nutrition of HIV-positive young children.

(5) It is imperative that attempts to improve the availability of dairy products to the HIV/AIDS afflicted do not undermine the security and stability of the indigenous dairy production and processing sector.

(6) The United States has more than 1 billion pounds (450,000 metric tons) of surplus non-fat dry milk in storage that has been acquired at an average cost of over 90 cents per pound for a total cost approaching $1,000,000,000, and storage costs are $1,500,000 per month and growing.

(7) This huge amount of milk overhangs the United States and world markets and deteriorates rapidly, going out of condition in about 3 years when it must be sold for a salvage value of only a few cents per pound.

(8) The impacts of breast-feeding on mother-to-child transmission remain controversial and appropriate interventions are not yet scientifically proven, especially in low-income communities where appropriate alternatives are not available and may be unsafe.

(9) There is a need for non-fat dry milk in international relief to use in human feeding programs that target the most vulnerable in society, particularly those affected by HIV/AIDS.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of Agriculture should—

(1) utilize the existing 416(b) authority of the Agricultural Act of 1949 to dispose of dairy surpluses for direct feeding programs to mothers and children living with HIV/AIDS and communities heavily impacted by the HIV/AIDS pandemic;

(2) make available funds for the provision of 100,000 metric tons of surplus non-fat dry milk to combat HIV/AIDS, with a special focus on HIV-positive mothers and children, to include ocean and inland transportation, accounting, monitoring and evaluation expenses incurred by the Secretary of Agriculture, and expenses incurred by private and voluntary organizations and cooperatives related to market assessments, project design, fortification, distribution, and other project expenses;

(3) give careful consideration to the local market conditions before dairy products are donated or monetized into a local economy, so as not to undermine the security and stability of the indigenous dairy production and processing sector; and

(4) Use none of these funds or commodities in any programs that would substitute dairy products for breast-feeding.

SEC. 105. (a) RESCISSION.—The unobligated balance of authority available under section 2108(a) of Public Law 107–20 is rescinded as of the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) APPROPRIATION.—There is appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture an amount equal to the unobligated balance rescinded by subsection (a) for expenses through fiscal year 2003 under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, as amended (7 U.S.C. 1721–1726a) for commodities supplied in connection with dispositions abroad pursuant to title II of said Act.

SEC. 106. Section 416(b)(7)(D)(iv) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431(b)(7)(D)(iv)) is amended by striking "subsection." and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "subsection, or to otherwise carry out the purposes of this subsection.".

SEC. 107. Notwithstanding any other provision of law and effective on the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary may use an amount not to exceed $12,000,000 from the amounts appropriated under the heading Food Safety and Inspection Service under the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 2001 (Public Law 106–387) to liquidate over-obligations and over-expenditures of the Food Safety and Inspection Service incurred during previous fiscal years, approved by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget based on documentation provided by the Secretary of Agriculture.

TITLE III—AMERICAN SERVICE MEMBERS' PROTECTION ACT

SEC. 3001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "American Servicemembers' Protection Act of 2002".

SEC. 3002. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On July 17, 1998, the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, meeting in Rome, Italy, adopted the "Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court". The vote on whether to proceed with the statute was 120 in favor to 7 against, with 21 countries abstaining. The United States voted against final adoption of the Rome Statute.

(2) As of April 30, 2001, 139 countries had signed the Rome Statute and 30 had ratified it. Pursuant to Article 126 of the Rome Statute, the statute will enter into force on the first day of the month after the 60th day following the date on which the 60th country deposits an instrument ratifying the statute.

(3) Since adoption of the Rome Statute, a Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court has met regularly to draft documents to implement the Rome Statute, including Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Elements of Crimes, and a definition of the Crime of Aggression.

(4) During testimony before the Congress following the adoption of the Rome Statute, the lead United States negotiator, Ambassador David Scheffer stated that the United States could not sign the Rome Statute because certain critical negotiating objectives of the United States had not been achieved. As a result, he stated: "We are left with consequences that do not serve the cause of international justice."

(5) Ambassador Scheffer went on to tell the Congress that: "Multinational peacekeeping forces operating in a country that has joined the treaty can be exposed to the Court's jurisdiction even if the country of the individual peacekeeper has not joined the treaty. Thus, the treaty purports to establish an arrangement whereby United States armed forces operating overseas could be conceivably prosecuted by the international court even if the United States has not agreed to be bound by the treaty. Not only is this contrary to the most fundamental principles of treaty law, it could inhibit the ability of the United States to use its military to meet alliance obligations and participate in multinational operations, including humanitarian interventions to save civilian lives. Other contributors to peacekeeping operations will be similarly exposed.".

(6) Notwithstanding these concerns, President Clinton directed that the United States sign the Rome Statute on December 31, 2000. In a statement issued that day, he stated that in view of the unremedied deficiencies of the Rome Statute,

"I will not, and do not recommend that my successor submit the Treaty to the Senate for advice and consent until our fundamental concerns are satisfied".

(7) Any American prosecuted by the International Criminal Court will, under the Rome Statute, be denied procedural protections to which all Americans are entitled under the Bill of Rights to the United States Constitution, such as the right to trial by jury.

(8) Members of the Armed Forces of the United States should be free from the risk of prosecution by the International Criminal Court, especially when they are stationed or deployed around the world to protect the vital national interests of the United States. The United States Government has an obligation to protect the members of its Armed Forces, to the maximum extent possible, against criminal prosecutions carried out by the International Criminal Court.

(9) In addition to exposing members of the Armed Forces of the United States to the risk of international criminal prosecution, the Rome Statute creates a risk that the President and other senior elected and appointed officials of the United States Government may be prosecuted by the International Criminal Court. Particularly if the Preparatory Commission agrees on a definition of the Crime of Aggression over United States objections, senior United States officials may be at risk of criminal prosecution for national security decisions involving such matters as responding to acts of terrorism; preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, and deterring aggression. No less than members of the Armed Forces of the United States, senior officials of the United States Government should be free from the risk of prosecution by the International Criminal Court, especially with respect to official actions taken by them to protect the national interests of the United States.

(10) Any agreement within the Preparatory Commission on a definition of the Crime of Aggression that usurps the prerogative of the United Nations Security Council under Article 39 of the charter of the United Nations to "determine the existence of any .... act of aggression" would contravene the charter of the United Nations and undermine deterrence.

(11) It is a fundamental principle of international law that a treaty is binding upon its parties only and that it does not create obligations for nonparties without their consent to be bound. The United States is not a party to the Rome Statute and will not be bound by any of its terms. The United States will not recognize the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court over United States nationals.

SEC. 3003. WAIVER AND TERMINATION OF PROHIBITIONS OF THIS TITLE.

(a) Authority To Initially Waive Sections 3005 and 3007.—The President is authorized to waive the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3005 and 3007 for a single period of 1 year. A waiver under this subsection may be issued only if the President at least 15 days in advance of exercising such authority—

(1) notifies the appropriate congressional committees of the intention to exercise such authority; and

(2) determines and reports to the appropriate congressional committees that the International Criminal Court has entered into a binding agreement that—

(A) prohibits the International Criminal Court from seeking to exercise jurisdiction over the following persons with respect to actions undertaken by them in an official capacity:

(i) covered United States persons;

(ii) covered allied persons; and

(iii) individuals who were covered United States persons or covered allied persons; and

(c) Authority To Waive Sections 3004 and 3006 With Respect to an Investigation or Prosecution of a Named Individual.—The President is authorized to waive the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3004 and 3006 to the degree such prohibitions and requirements would prevent United States cooperation with an investigation or prosecution of a named individual by the International Criminal Court. A waiver under this subsection may be issued only if the President at least 15 days in advance of exercising such authority—

(1) notifies the appropriate congressional committees of the intention to exercise such authority; and

(2) determines and reports to the appropriate congressional committees that—

(A) a waiver pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3005 and 3007 is in effect;

(B) there is reason to believe that the named individual committed the crime or crimes that are the subject of the International Criminal Court's investigation or prosecution;

(C) it is in the national interest of the United States for the International Criminal Court's investigation or prosecution of the named individual to proceed; and

(D) in investigating events related to actions by the named individual, none of the following persons will be investigated, arrested, detained, prosecuted, or imprisoned by or on behalf of the International Criminal Court with respect to actions undertaken by them in an official capacity:

(i) Covered United States persons.

(ii) Covered allied persons.

(iii) Individuals who were covered United States persons or covered allied persons.

(d) Termination of Waiver Pursuant to Subsection (c).—Any waiver or waivers exercised pursuant to subsection (c) of the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3004 and 3006 shall terminate at any time that a waiver pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of the prohibitions and requirements of sections 3005 and 3007 expires and is not extended pursuant to subsection (b).

(e) Termination of Prohibitions of This Title.—The prohibitions and requirements of sections 3004, 3005, 3006, and 3007 shall cease to apply, and the authority of section 3008 shall terminate, if the United States becomes a party to the International Criminal Court pursuant to a treaty made under article II, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 3004. PROHIBITION ON COOPERATION WITH THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

(a) Application.—The provisions of this section—

(2) shall not prohibit—

(A) any action permitted under section 3008; or

(B) communication by the United States of its policy with respect to a matter.

(b) Prohibition on Responding to Requests for Cooperation.—Notwithstanding section 1782 of title 28, United States Code, or any other provision of law, no United States Court, and no agency or entity of any State or local government, including any court, may cooperate with the International Criminal Court in response to a request for cooperation submitted by the International Criminal Court pursuant to the Rome Statute.

(g) Restriction on Assistance Pursuant to Mutual Legal Assistance Treaties.—The United States shall exercise its rights to limit the use of assistance provided under all treaties and executive agreements for mutual legal assistance in criminal matters, multilateral conventions with legal assistance provisions, and extradition treaties, to which the United States is a party, and in connection with the execution or issuance of any letter rogatory, to prevent the transfer to, or other use by, the International Criminal Court of any assistance provided by the United States under such treaties and letters rogatory.

(h) PROHIBITION ON INVESTIGATIVE ACTIVITIES OF AGENTS.—No agent of the International Criminal Court may conduct, in the United States or any territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, any investigative activity relating to a preliminary inquiry, investigation, prosecution, or other proceeding at the International Criminal Court.

SEC. 3005. RESTRICTION ON UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION IN CERTAIN UNITED NATIONS PEACEKEEPING OPERATIONS.

(a) POLICY.—Effective beginning on the date on which the Rome Statute enters into force pursuant to Article 126 of the Rome Statute, the President should use the voice and vote of the United States in the United Nations Security Council to ensure that each resolution of the Security Council authorizing any peacekeeping operation under chapter VI of the charter of the United Nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations permanently exempts, at a minimum, members of the Armed Forces of the United States participating in such operation from criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court for actions undertaken by such personnel in connection with the operation.

(b) RESTRICTION.—Members of the Armed Forces of the United States may not participate in any peacekeeping operation under chapter VI of the charter of the United Nations or peace enforcement operation under chapter VII of the charter of the United Nations, the creation of which is authorized by the United Nations Security Council on or after the date that the Rome Statute enters into effect pursuant to Article 126 of the Rome Statute, unless the President has submitted to the appropriate congressional committees a certification described in subsection (c) with respect to such operation.

(c) CERTIFICATION.—The certification referred to in subsection (b) is a certification by the President that—

(1) members of the Armed Forces of the United States are able to participate in the peacekeeping or peace enforcement operation without risk of criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court because, in authorizing the operation, the United Nations Security Council permanently exempted, at a minimum, members of the Armed Forces of the United States participating in the operation from criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court for actions undertaken by them in connection with the operation;

(2) members of the Armed Forces of the United States are able to participate in the peacekeeping or peace enforcement operation without risk of criminal prosecution or other assertion of jurisdiction by the International Criminal Court because each country in which members of the Armed Forces of the United States participating in the operation will be present either is not a party to the International Criminal Court and has not invoked the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court pursuant to Article 12 of the Rome Statute, or has entered into an agreement in accordance with Article 98 of the Rome Statute preventing the International Criminal Court from proceeding against members of the Armed Forces of the United States present in that country; or

(3) the national interests of the United States justify participation by members of the Armed Forces of the United States in the peacekeeping or peace enforcement operation.

SEC. 3006. PROHIBITION ON DIRECT OR INDIRECT TRANSFER OF CLASSIFIED NATIONAL SECURITY INFORMATION AND LAW ENFORCEMENT INFORMATION TO THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than the date on which the Rome Statute enters into force, the President shall ensure that appropriate procedures are in place to prevent the transfer of classified national security information and law enforcement information to the International Criminal Court for the purpose of facilitating an investigation, apprehension, or prosecution.

(b) INDIRECT TRANSFER.—The procedures adopted pursuant to subsection (a) shall be designed to prevent the transfer to the United Nations and to the government of any country that is party to the International Criminal Court of classified national security information and law enforcement information that specifically relates to matters known to be under investigation or prosecution by the International Criminal Court, except to the degree that satisfactory assurances are received from the United Nations or that government, as the case may be, that such information will not be made available to the International Criminal Court for the purpose of facilitating an investigation, apprehension, or prosecution.

(c) CONSTRUCTION.—The provisions of this section shall not be construed to prohibit any action permitted under section 3008.

TITLE IV—MAIL DELIVERY IN ALASKA

SEC. 4001. RURAL SERVICE IMPROVEMENT.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This title may be cited as the "Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002".

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The State of Alaska is the largest State in the Union and has a very limited system of roads connecting communities.

(2) Alaska has more pilots per capita than any other State in the Union.

(3) Pilots flying in Alaska are often the most skilled and best-prepared pilots in the world.

(4) Air travel within the State of Alaska is often hampered by severe weather conditions and treacherous terrain.

(5) The United States Government owns nearly ⅔ of Alaska's landmass, including large tracts of land separating isolated communities within the State.

(6) Such Federal ownership has inhibited the ability of Alaskans to build roads connecting isolated communities.

(7) Most communities and a large portion of the population within the State can only be reached by air.

(8) The vast majority of food items and everyday necessities destined for these isolated communities and populations can only be transported through the air.

(9) The Intra-Alaska Bypass Mail system, created by Congress and operated by the United States Postal Service under section 5402 of title 39, United States Code, with input from the Department of Transportation, connecting hundreds of rural and isolated communities within the State, is a critical piece of the Alaska and the national transportation system. The system is like a 4-legged stool, designed to—

(A) provide the most affordable means of delivering food and everyday necessities to these rural and isolated communities;

(B) establish a system whereby the Postal Service can meet its obligations to deliver mail to every house and business in America;

(C) support affordable and reliable passenger service; and

(D) support affordable and reliable nonmail freight service.

(10) Without the Intra-Alaska Bypass Mail system—

(A) it would be difficult and more expensive for the Postal Service to meet its obligation of delivering mail to every house and business in America; and

(B) food, medicine, freight, and everyday necessities and passenger service for these rural and isolated communities would cost several times the current level.

(11) Attempts by Congress to support passenger and nonmail freight service in Alaska using the Intra-Alaska Bypass Mail system have yielded some positive results, but some carriers have been manipulating the system by carrying few, if any, passengers and little nonmail freight while earning most of their revenues from the carriage of nonpriority bypass mail.

(12) As long as the Federal Government continues to own large tracts of land within the State of Alaska which impedes access across these lands to connect isolated communities, it is in the best interest of the Postal Service, the residents of Alaska and the United States—

(A) to ensure that the Intra-Alaska Bypass Mail system remains strong, viable, and affordable for the Postal Service;

(B) to ensure that residents of rural and isolated communities in Alaska continue to have affordable, reliable, and safe passenger service;

(C) to ensure that residents of rural and isolated communities in Alaska continue to have affordable, reliable, and safe nonmail freight service;

(D) to encourage that intra-Alaska air carriers move toward safer, more secure, and more reliable air transportation under the Federal Aviation Administration's guidelines and in accordance with part 121 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, where such operations are supported by the needs of the community; and

(E) that Congress, pursuant to the authority granted under Article I, section 8 of the United States Constitution to establish Post Offices and post roads, make changes to ensure that the Intra-Alaska Bypass Mail system continues to be used to support substantial passenger and nonmail freight service and to reduce costs for the Postal Service.

(B) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting a semicolon; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(C) shall offer a bush passenger carrier providing service on a route between an acceptance point and a hub not served by a mainline carrier the opportunity to receive equitable tender of nonpriority bypass mail at mainline service rates when a mainline carrier begins serving that route if the bush passenger carrier—

"(i) meets the requirements of paragraph (1);

"(ii) provided at least 20 percent of the passenger service (as calculated in subsection (h)(5)) between such city pair for the 6 months immediately preceding the date on which the bush carrier seeks such tender; and

"(D) shall offer bush passenger carriers and nonmail freight carriers the opportunity to receive equitable tender of nonpriority bypass mail at mainline service rates from a hub point to a destination city if the city pair is also being served by a mainline carrier and—

"(I) the bush carrier meets the requirements of paragraph (1);

"(II) the service to be provided on such route by the bush carrier is not otherwise available through direct mainline service; and

"(III) tender of mail to such bush carrier will not decrease the efficiency of nonpriority bypass mail service (in terms of payments to all carriers providing service on the city pair route and timely delivery) for the route;

"(F) may offer tender of nonpriority bypass mail to a passenger carrier from an acceptance point to a destination city beyond a hub point at a composite rate if the Postal Service determines that—

"(i) the carrier provides passenger service in accordance with the requirements of subsection (h)(2);

"(ii) the carrier qualifies under subsection (h) to be tendered nonpriority bypass mail out of the hub point being bypassed;

"(iii) the tender of such mail will not decrease efficiency of delivery of nonpriority bypass mail service into or out of the hub point being bypassed; and "(iv) such tender will result in reduced payments to the carrier by the Postal Service over flying the entire route; and

"(G) notwithstanding subparagraph (F), shall offer equitable tender of nonpriority mail in proportion to passenger and nonmail freight mail pools described in this section between qualified passenger and nonmail freight carriers on a route from an acceptance point to a bush destination at a composite rate if—

The tender of nonpriority bypass mail under subparagraph (G) shall be on an equitable basis between the qualified carriers that provide the direct service on the city pair route and the qualified carriers that provide service between the hub point being bypassed and the destination point, based on the volume of nonpriority bypass mail on both routes.".

(4) SELECTION OF CARRIERS TO HUB POINTS.—Section 5402(g) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(4)(A) Except as provided under subparagraph (B) and paragraph (5), the Postal Service shall select only existing mainline carriers to provide nonpriority bypass mail service between an acceptance point and a hub point in the State of Alaska.

"(B) The Postal Service may select a carrier other than an existing mainline carrier to provide nonpriority bypass mail service on a mainline route in the State of Alaska if—

"(i) the Postal Service determines (in accordance with criteria established in advance by the Postal Service) that the mail service between the acceptance point and the hub point is deficient and provides written notice of the determination to existing mainline carriers to the hub point; and

"(ii) after the 30-day period following issuance of notice under clause (i), including notice of inadequate capacity, the Postal Service determines that deficiencies in service to the hub point have not been eliminated.

"(5)(A) The Postal Service shall offer equitable tender of nonpriority bypass mail to a new 121 mainline passenger carrier entering a mainline route in the State of Alaska, if that carrier—

"(i) meets the requirements of subsection (g)(1)(D)(ii); and

"(ii) has provided at least 50 percent of the number of insured passenger seats as the number of available passenger seats being provided by the mainline passenger carrier providing the greatest number of available passenger seats on that route for the 6 months immediately preceding the date on which such carrier seeks tender.

"(B) A new 121 mainline passenger carrier that is tendered nonpriority mainline bypass mail under subparagraph (A)—

"(i) shall be eligible for equitable tender of such mail only on city pair routes where the carrier meets the conditions of subparagraph (A);

"(ii) may not count the passenger service provided under subparagraph (A) toward the carrier meeting the minimum requirements of this section; and

"(iii) shall provide at least 20 percent of the passenger service (as determined for bush passenger carriers in subsection (h)(5)) on such route to remain eligible to be tendered nonpriority mainline bypass mail.

"(C) Notwithstanding paragraphs (1)(B) and (5)(A), a new 121 mainline passenger carrier, otherwise qualified under this subsection, may immediately receive equitable tender of nonpriority mainline bypass mail to a hub point if it meets the requirements of subsections (g)(1) (A), (C), and (D) and (h)(2)(B) and—

"(i) all qualified 121 mainline passenger carriers discontinue service on that city pair route; or

"(ii) no 121 mainline passenger carrier serves that city pair route.

"(D) A carrier operating under a code share agreement on the date of enactment of the Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002 that received tender of nonpriority mainline bypass mail on a city pair route may count the passenger service provided under the entire code share arrangement on such route if the code share agreement terminates. That carrier shall continue to provide at least 20 percent of the passenger service (as determined for bush passenger carriers in subsection (h)(5)) between the city pair as a 121 mainline passenger carrier while seeking such tender.

"(6)(A) Notwithstanding subsection (g)(1)(B), passenger carriers providing Essential Air Service under a Department of Transportation order issued under subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, U.S.C., shall be tendered all nonpriority mail, in addition to all nonpriority bypass mail, by the Postal Service to destination cities served by the Essential Air Service flights consistent with that order unless the Postal Service finds that the Essential Air Service carrier's service does not meet the needs of the Postal Service.

"(B) Service provided under this paragraph, including service provided to points served in conjunction with service being subsidized under the Essential Air Service contract, may not be applied toward any of the minimum eligibility requirements of this section.".

(5) SELECTION OF CARRIERS TO BUSH POINTS.—Section 5402 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h)(1) Except as provided under paragraph (7), on a given city pair route, the Postal Service shall offer equitable tender of 70 percent of the nonpriority bypass mail on that route to all carriers providing scheduled passenger service in accordance with part 121 or part 135 that—

"(A) meet the requirements of subsection (g)(1);

"(B) provided 20 percent or more of the passenger service (as calculated in paragraph (5)) between the city pair for the 12 months preceding the date on which the 121 passenger aircraft or the 135 passenger carrier seek tender of nonpriority bypass mail; and

"(C) meet the requirements of paragraph (2).

"(2) To remain eligible for equitable tender under this subsection, the carrier or aircraft shall—

"(A) continue to provide not less than 20 percent of the passenger service on the city pair route for which the carrier is seeking the tender of such nonpriority bypass mail;

"(B)(i) for operations under part 121, operate aircraft type certificated to carry at least 19 passengers;

"(ii) for operations under part 135, operate aircraft type certificated to carry at least 5 passengers; or

"(iii) for operations under part 135 where only a water landing is available, operate aircraft type certificated to carry at least 3 passengers;

"(C) insure all available passenger seats on the city pair route on which the carrier seeks tender of such mail; and

"(D) operate flights under its published schedule.

"(3)(A) Except as provided under subparagraph (E), if a 135 passenger carrier serves a city pair route and meets the requirements of paragraph (1) or (2) when a 121 passenger carrier becomes qualified to be tendered nonpriority bypass mail on such route with a 121 passenger aircraft in accordance with paragraphs (1) and (2), the qualifying 135 passenger carriers on that route shall convert to operations with a 121 passenger aircraft within 5 years after the 121 passenger aircraft begins receiving tender on that route in order to remain eligible for equitable tender under paragraph (1). The 135 carrier shall—

"(i) begin the process of conversion not later than 2 years after the 121 passenger aircraft begins carrying nonpriority bypass mail on that route; and

"(ii) submit a part 121 compliance statement not later than 4 years after the 121 passenger aircraft begins carrying nonpriority bypass mail on that route.

"(B) Completion of conversion under subparagraph (A) shall not be required if all 121 passenger carriers discontinue the carriage of nonpriority bypass mail with 121 passenger aircraft on the city pair route.

"(C) Any qualified carrier operating in the State of Alaska under this section may request a waiver from subparagraph (A). Such a request, at the discretion of the Secretary, may be granted for good cause shown. The requesting party shall state the basis for such a waiver.

"(D) If 6 years and 3 months after the date of enactment of the Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002, a 135 passenger carrier is providing service on a city pair route and a 121 passenger aircraft becomes eligible to receive tender of nonpriority bypass mail on that route, that 135 passenger carrier shall convert to operations under part 121 within 12 months of the 121 passenger carrier being tendered nonpriority bypass mail. The Postal Service shall not continue the tender of nonpriority bypass mail to a 135 passenger carrier that fails to convert to part 121 operations within 12 months after the 121 passenger carrier being tendered such mail under this paragraph.

"(E) Notwithstanding the requirements of this subsection, if only 1 passenger carrier or aircraft is qualified to be tendered nonpriority bypass mail as a passenger carrier or aircraft on a city pair route, the Postal Service shall tender 20 percent of the nonpriority bypass mail described under paragraph (1) to the passenger carrier or aircraft providing the next highest level of passenger service on such route.

"(4) Qualification for the tender of mail under this subsection shall not be counted toward the minimum qualifications necessary to be tendered nonpriority bypass mail on any other route.

"(5)(A)(i) In this section, the percent of the passenger service shall be calculated using the data described under clause (ii). To ensure accurate reporting of market share the Postal Service shall compare the resulting percentage to the data collected under subsection (k). Any carrier purposefully falsifying data or significantly misstating market share in an attempt to qualify for tender of nonpriority bypass mail may be subject to penalties described in subsection (o).

"(ii) The Postal Service shall calculate the percent of passenger service provided by a carrier on a city pair route by calculating the lesser of—

"(I) the amount of the passenger excise tax paid by or on behalf of a carrier, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares for passengers actually flown by a carrier from the origination point to the destination point, divided by the value of the total passenger excise taxes, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares paid by or on behalf of all passenger carriers providing service from the hub point to the bush destination point; or

‘‘(II) the amount of half of the passenger excise tax paid by or on behalf of a carrier, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares for passengers actually flown by a carrier on the city pair route, divided by the value of the total passenger excise taxes, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares paid by or on behalf of all passenger carriers providing service between the origination point and the destination point.

‘‘(B) For the purposes of calculating passenger service as described under subparagraph (A), a bush passenger carrier providing intervillage bush passenger service may include the carriage of passengers carried along any point of the route between the route's origination point and the final destination point. Such calculation shall be based only on the carriage of passengers on regularly scheduled flights and only on flights being flown in a direction away from the hub point. Passenger service provided on chartered flights shall not be included in the carrier's calculation of passenger service.

‘‘(6)(A) The Secretary shall establish new bush rates for passenger carriers receiving tender of nonpriority bypass mail under this subsection.

‘‘(B) The Secretary shall establish a bush rate based on data collected under subsection (k) from 121 bush passenger carriers. Such rates shall be paid to all bush passenger carriers operating on city pair routes where a 121 bush passenger carrier is tendered nonpriority bypass mail.

‘‘(C) The Secretary shall establish a bush rate based on data collected under subsection (k) from 135 bush passenger carriers. Such rates shall be paid to all bush passenger carriers operating on city pair routes where no 121 bush passenger carrier is tendered nonpriority bypass mail.

‘‘(D) The Secretary shall establish a bush rate based on data collected under subsection (k) from bush passenger carriers operating aircraft on city pair routes where only water landings are available. Such rates shall be paid to all bush passenger carriers operating on the city pair routes where only water landings are available.

‘‘(7) The percentage rate in paragraph (1) shall be 75 percent 3 years and 3 months after the date of enactment of the Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002.

‘‘(i)(1) Except as provided under paragraph (7), on a given city pair route, the Postal Service shall offer equitable tender of 20 percent of the nonpriority bypass mail on such route to those carriers transporting 25 percent or more of the total nonmail freight (in revenue or weight as determined by the Postal Service), for the 12 months immediately preceding the date on which the freight carrier seeks tender of nonpriority bypass mail.

‘‘(2) To remain eligible for equitable tender under this subsection, a freight carrier shall continue to provide not less than 25 percent of the nonmail freight service on the city pair route for which the carrier is seeking tender of such mail.

‘‘(3) If a new freight carrier enters a market, that freight carrier shall meet the minimum requirements of subsection (g)(1) and shall operate for 12 months on a given city pair route before being eligible for equitable tender of nonpriority bypass mail on that route.

‘‘(4) If no carrier qualifies for tender of nonpriority bypass mail under this subsection, such mail to be divided under this subsection, as described in paragraph (1), shall be tendered to the nonmail freight carrier providing the highest percentage of nonmail freight service (in terms of revenue or weight as determined by the Postal Service as calculated under paragraph (6)) on the city pair route. If no nonmail freight carrier is present on a route to receive tender of nonpriority bypass mail under this paragraph, the nonpriority bypass mail to be divided under paragraph (1) shall be divided equitably among carriers qualified under subsection (h).

‘‘(5) Qualification for the tender of mail under this subsection shall not be counted toward the minimum qualifications necessary to be tendered nonpriority bypass mail on any other route.

‘‘(6)(A) In this subsection, the percent of nonmail freight shall be determined by calculating the lesser of—

‘‘(i) the amount of the freight excise tax paid by or on behalf of a carrier, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares for nonmail freight actually flown by a carrier from the origination point to the destination point, divided by the value of the total nonmail freight excise taxes, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares paid by or on behalf of all nonmail freight carriers providing service from the origination point to the destination point; or

‘‘(ii) the amount of half of the nonmail freight excise tax paid by or on behalf of a carrier, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares for nonmail freight actually flown by a carrier on the city pair route, divided by the value of the total nonmail freight excise taxes, as determined by reviewing the collected amount of base fares paid by or on behalf of all nonmail freight carriers providing service on the city pair route.

‘‘(B) To ensure accurate reporting of market share the Postal Service shall compare the resulting percentage under subparagraph (A) to the percent of nonmail freight carried on a city pair route as calculated from data provided pursuant to subsection (k), by dividing the revenue of, or weight of (as determined by the Postal Service), nonmail freight earned by or carried by a carrier from the transport of nonmail freight from an origination point to a destination point by the total amount of revenue earned, or the weight of, nonmail freight carried (as determined by the Postal Service) by all carriers from the transport of nonmail freight from the origination point to the destination point. Any carrier purposefully falsifying data or significantly misstating market share in an attempt to qualify for tender of nonpriority bypass mail may be subject to penalties described in subsection (o).

‘‘(7) The percentage rate in paragraph (1) shall be 25 percent 3 years and 3 months after the date of enactment of the Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002.

‘‘(j)(1) Except as provided by paragraph (3), there shall be equitable tender of 10 percent of the nonpriority bypass mail to all carriers on each city pair route meeting the requirements of subsection (g)(1) that do not otherwise qualify for tender under subsection (h) or (i).

‘‘(2) If no carrier qualifies under this subsection with respect to a city pair route, the 10 percent of nonpriority bypass mail allocated under paragraph (1) shall be divided evenly between the pools described under subsections (h) and (i) to be equitably tendered among qualified carriers under such subsections, such that—

‘‘(A) the amount of nonpriority bypass mail available for tender among qualified carriers under subsection (h) shall be 75 percent; and

‘‘(B) the amount of nonpriority bypass mail available for tender among qualified carriers under subsection (i) shall be 25 percent.

‘‘(3)(A) Except as provided by subparagraph (B), the percentage rate under paragraph (1) shall be 0 percent 3 years and 3 months after the date of enactment of the Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002.

‘‘(B) The percentage rate under paragraph (1) shall remain 10 percent for equitable tender for 6 years and 3 months after the date of enactment of the Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002 for a nonpriority bypass mail carrier on bush routes originating from the main hub of the carrier designated under subparagraph (C), if the carrier seeking the tender of such mail—

‘‘(i) meets the requirements of subsection (g)(1);

‘‘(ii) is not qualified under subsection (h) or (i);

‘‘(iii) operates routes originating from the main hub of the carrier designated under subparagraph (C); and

‘‘(iv) has invested at least $500,000 in a physical hanger facility prior to January 1, 2002 in such a hub city.

‘‘(C) For purposes of subparagraph (B), a carrier may designate only one hub city as its main hub and once such designation is transmitted to the Postal Service it may not be changed. Such selection and transmission must be transmitted to the Postal Service within 6 months of the date of enactment of the Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002. A carrier attempting to receive tender of nonpriority bypass mail under this subsection shall not be eligible for such tender after the carrier becomes qualified for tender of nonpriority bypass mail under subsection (h) or (i) on any route. The purchase of another carrier's hanger facility after such date of enactment shall not be considered sufficient to meet the requirement of subparagraph (B)(iv).

‘‘(k)(1) Not less than every 2 years, in conjunction with annual updates, the Secretary shall review the need for a bush mail rate investigation. The Secretary shall use show cause procedures to speedily and more accurately determine the cost of providing bush mail service. In determining such rates, the Secretary shall not take into account the cost of passenger insurance rates or premiums paid by the passenger carriers or other costs associated with passenger service.

‘‘(2) In order to assure sufficient, reliable, and timely traffic data to meet the requirements of this subsection, the Secretary shall require—

‘‘(A) the monthly submission of the bush carrier's data on T–100 diskettes, or any other suitable form of data collection, as determined by the Secretary; and

‘‘(B) the carriers to retain all books, records, and other source and summary documentation to support their reports and to preserve and maintain such documentation in a manner that readily permits the audit and examination by representatives of the Postal Service or the Secretary.

‘‘(3) Documentation under paragraph (2) shall be retained for 7 years or until the Secretary indicates that the records may be destroyed. Copies of flight logs for aircraft sold or disposed of shall be retained.

‘‘(4) Carriers qualified to be tendered nonpriority bypass mail shall submit to the Secretary the number and type of aircraft in the carrier's fleet, the level of passenger insurance covering its fleet, and the name of the insurance company providing such coverage.

‘‘(5) Not later than 30 days after the last day of each calendar month, carriers shall report to the Secretary the excise taxes paid by city pair to the Department of the Treasury and the weight of and revenue earned by the carriage of nonmail freight. Final compiled data shall be made available to carriers providing service in the hub.

‘‘(l) No qualified carrier may be tendered nonpriority bypass mail under subsections (h) and (i) simultaneously on a route unless no other carrier is tendered mail under either subsection.

‘‘(m)(1) Carriers qualifying for tender under subsections (h) and (i) simultaneously shall be tendered nonpriority bypass mail under subsection (h).

"(2) A carrier shall be tendered nonpriority bypass mail under subsection (i) if that carrier—

"(A) was qualified under both subsections (h) and (i) simultaneously; and

"(B) becomes unqualified under subsection (h) but remains qualified under subsection (i).

"(n)(1) A carrier operation resulting from a merger or acquisition between any 2 carriers operating between points in Alaska shall have the passenger and nonmail freight of all such merged or acquired carriers on the applicable route counted toward meeting the resulting carrier's minimum requirements to receive equitable tender of nonpriority bypass mail on such route for the 12-month period following the merger or acquisition.

"(2) After the 12-month period described under paragraph (1), the carrier resulting from the merger or acquisition shall demonstrate that the carrier meets the minimum passenger or nonmail freight carriage requirements of this section to continue receiving tender of such mail.

"(o) In addition to any penalties applied to a carrier by the Federal Aviation Administration or the Secretary, any carrier that significantly misstates passenger or nonmail freight data required to be reported under this section on any route, in an attempt to qualify for tender of nonpriority bypass mail, shall receive—

"(1) a 1-month suspension of tender of nonpriority bypass mail on the route where the data was misstated for the first offense;

"(2) a 6-month suspension of tender of nonpriority bypass mail on the route where the data was misstated for the second offense;

"(3) a 1-year suspension of tender of all nonpriority bypass mail in the entire State of Alaska for the third offense in the State; and

"(4) a permanent suspension of tender of all nonpriority bypass mail in the entire State of Alaska for the fourth offense in the State.

"(p)(1) The Postal Service or the Secretary, in carrying out subsection (g)(2), (h), or (i), may deny equitable tender to an otherwise qualified carrier who does not operate under this section in good faith or under the intent of the 'Rural Service Improvement Act of 2002'.

"(2) The Postal Service or the Secretary may waive any provision of subsection (h) or (i), if the carrier provides substantial passenger or nonmail freight service on the route where the carrier seeks tender of nonpriority mail and nonpriority bypass mail.

"(3) To ensure adequate competition among passenger and nonmail freight carriers on a mainline route the Postal Service or the Secretary may waive the requirements of subsection (g) (1)(D), (2)(E), (4), or (5), or any provision of subsection (h), if—

"(A) a 121 bush passenger carrier seeks tender of nonpriority mail or nonpriority bypass mail on a mainline route not served by a 121 mainline passenger carrier and the 121 bush passenger carrier provides substantial passenger or nonmail freight service on the route; or

"(B) a carrier meeting the requirements of subsection (g)(1)(D)(ii) seeks tender of nonpriority bypass mail and provides substantial nonmail freight service on the city pair route.

Waivers granted under this paragraph shall cease to be valid once a qualified mainline carrier begins providing service and seeks tender of nonpriority bypass mail in accordance with this section on the city pair route. The receipt of waivers and subsequent operation of service on a city pair route under this subsection shall not be counted toward meeting the requirements of any part of this section for any other city pair route. In granting waivers under this paragraph and offering equitable tender of nonpriority bypass mail the Postal Service or the Secretary shall give preference to passenger service needs over nonmail freight needs on a city pair route.

"(4) In granting waivers for or denying tender to carriers under this subsection, the Postal Service or the Secretary shall consider in the following order of importance—

"(A) the passenger needs of the destination to be served (including amount and level);

"(B) the nonmail freight needs of the destination to be served;

"(C) the amount of nonpriority bypass mail service already available to the destination;

"(D) the mail needs of the destination to be served;

"(E) the savings to the Postal Service in terms of payments made to carriers;

"(F) the amount or level of passenger service already available to the destination; and

"(G) the amount of nonmail freight service already available to the destination.

"(q) The Secretary shall make a regular review of carriers receiving, or attempting to qualify to receive, equitable tender of nonpriority bypass mail. If the Secretary suspends or revokes an operating certificate, the Secretary shall notify the Postal Service. Upon such notification, the Postal Service shall cease tender of mail to such carrier until the Secretary certifies the carrier is operating in a safe manner. Upon such receipt, the carrier shall demonstrate that it otherwise meets the minimum carriage requirements of this section before being tendered mail under this section.

"(r) The Postal Service shall have the authority to tender nonpriority bypass mail to any carrier that meets the requirements of subsection (g)(1) on any route on an emergency basis. Such emergency tender shall cease when a carrier qualifies for tender on such route under the terms of this section.

"(s) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and except for written contracts authorized under subsections (b), (c) and (d) of this section, tender by the Postal Service of any category of mail to a carrier for transportation between any two points within the State of Alaska shall not give rise to any contract between the Postal Service and a carrier, nor shall any such carrier acquire any right in continued or future tender of such mail by virtue of past or present receipt of such mail. This subsection shall apply to any case commenced before, on, or after the date of enactment of this subsection.".

(d) ACTIONS OF AIR CARRIERS TO QUALIFY.—Beginning 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, if the Secretary determines, based on the Secretary's findings and recommendations of the Postal Service, that an air carrier being tendered nonpriority bush bypass mail is not taking actions to attempt to qualify as a bush passenger or nonmail freight carrier under section 5402 of title 39, United States Code (as amended by this title), the Postal Service shall immediately cease tender of all nonpriority bypass mail to such carrier.

(e) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) TITLE 39.—Section 5402 of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in subsections (b) through (e) (as redesignated by this title) and subsection (f) by striking "Secretary of Transportation" each place it appears and inserting "Secretary"; and

(B) in subsection (f)—

(i) by striking "subsections (a), (b), and (c)" and inserting "subsections (b), (c), and (d)"; and

(ii) by striking "subsection (d)" and inserting "subsection (e)".

(2) TITLE 49.—Section 41901 of title 49, United States Code, is amended in subsection (a), by striking "5402(d)" and inserting "5402(e)".

(f) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Postal Service and the Secretary of Transportation shall submit a report to the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate on the progress of implementing this title.

(g) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under paragraph (2), this title (including the amendments made by this title) shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) SELECTION OF CARRIERS.—Subsection (c)(5) shall take effect 15 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

This Act may be cited as the "2002 Supplemental Appropriations Act for Further Recovery From and Response To Terrorist Attacks on the United States".

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I will have more to say about the so-called hate crimes legislation tomorrow.

This is a very important cloture vote we are having tomorrow. I am disappointed that we have not had more opportunities to debate amendments. This bill has been pending, yet no one has come forward to offer amendments.

It makes my point as we file cloture. We indicated a concern for the reports that had been shared with us that some of our colleagues wished to offer—I think the phrase was—"hundreds of amendments" to the hate crimes bill. We are working under very tight time constraints.

It is my belief that we ought to have an opportunity to offer amendments, to have the debate on the amendments, to bring those amendments to closure, and then have a vote on the hate crimes bill. I have heard colleagues in the Chamber on the other side of the aisle say this has never happened before. If it has not been submitted, tomorrow we will submit for the RECORD the number of times our Republican colleagues did exactly what we did. I think it was 34 times—34 times the bill was offered, and cloture was filed immediately. I do not know how many of those times the Republican leader—the majority leader at the time—chose to fill the parliamentary tree as well, denying and precluding Democrats and others from offering amendments to the bill. This is by far not the first time.

I announced at the very beginning of my tenure as majority leader that I would never fill the tree to preclude amendments. And I am going to hold to that promise. But there are times when in order to move legislation along, filing cloture on a bill is important. I intend to do that again this afternoon. It is unfortunate. But we are going to have to increase the debt limit. The administration has made its case publicly. They have talked to me privately on numerous occasions about the importance of increasing the debt limit.

We can go into all the reasons it is necessary. But in an effort not to at least now politicize the issue, I think it is important for us to get the job done. It is the responsible thing to do.

We are going to take up the debt limit and send it to the House as quickly as possible because time is running out. We are told that we only have a couple of weeks. We have to address this issue in that period of time.

If we fail cloture tomorrow on hate crimes, it will be my intention to move as quickly as possible to the debt limit legislation. That will require procedural cooperation. I am hopeful that we can get procedural cooperation. The Republican leader and I talked today. It would be my hope to get a unanimous consent agreement to take it up. Failing that, of course, we would then have to go through the motion to proceed, and then the bill itself.

INCREASING THE PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT—MOTION TO PROCEED

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, in an effort to anticipate whatever may come with regard to consideration of the debt limit legislation, I now move to proceed to Calendar No. 407, S. 2578, the debt limit increase and I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the motion to proceed to calendar No. 407, S. 2578, a bill to amend title 31 of the U.S. Code to increase the public debt limit:

Harry Reid, Jack Reed, John Rockefeller, Daniel Inouye, Jon Corzine, Herb Kohl, Zell Miller, Max Cleland, John Breaux, Richard Durbin, Max Baucus, Barbara Boxer, Maria Cantwell, Daniel Akaka, Edward Kennedy and Tom Daschle.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I now withdraw the motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2076 be star printed with the changes at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, JUNE 11, 2002

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, June 11; that following the prayer and the pledge, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and there be a period of morning business until 10:45 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the first half of the time under the control of the majority leader or his designee and the second half of the time under the control of the Republican leader or his designee; that at 10:45 a.m., the Senate resume consideration of S. 625, with 60 minutes of debate prior to the vote on cloture on the hate crimes legislation; further, that Senators have until 10:45 a.m. to file second-degree amendments to the hate crimes legislation; that the live quorum with respect to the cloture motion filed earlier today be waived, and that the Senate recess from 12:30 p.m. to 2:15 p.m. for the weekly party conferences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, the Senate will vote on cloture on the hate crimes legislation, therefore, at approximately 11:45 a.m.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:42 p.m., adjourned until Tuesday, June 11, 2002, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN RECOGNITION OF ANNE EMERMAN

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 10, 2002

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to Anne Emerman, a dedicated community activist who will be honored by Community Board Six in Manhattan. Ms. Emerman, a former Board Member of Community Board Six, is a knowledgeable, committed and effective advocate who was a constructive and energetic member of the Community Board.

A native of New York City, Anne Emerman attended Hunter College, where she graduated in 1962. She then pursued a Master's Degree at Columbia University where she graduated from the School of Social Work in 1964. Upon graduation she began working as a Psychiatric Social Worker and Supersivor at Bellevue Hospital, where she remained until 1972.

Her work with the mentally disabled led Ms. Emerman to begin advocating extensively and passionately on behalf of the disabled community. She has organized and participated in numerous demonstrations to raise visibility on this important issue. As a member of Disabled Action, she has worked with various government officials to urge the passage of civil rights laws to protect persons with disabilities. She has also been a key figure in a number of class action lawsuits intended to influence case law affecting disabled Americans. Her overwhelming commitment to this issue led to her being named Director of the Mayor's Office of People with Disabilities, where she served from 1990–1994.

Ms. Emerman's commitment to activism resulted in her appointment to Community Board 6. There she continued to advocate on behalf of those issues most important to her. In addition to her work on behalf of the disabled, she has fought to ensure that all people have equal access to affordable housing, education, health and home care and public transportation. She also worked to ensure oversight of polling locations so that all New Yorkers are provided access to exercise their constitutional right to vote. Recently, Ms. Emerman began working with the New York City Council's first full standing Committee on Mental Health, Mental Retardation, Alcoholism, Substance Abuse and Disability.

In recognition of her outstanding contributions to the community, particularly her work to raise awareness on behalf of Americans living with disabilities, I ask that my colleagues join me in saluting Anne Emerman.

JOYCE ELLINGTON HONORED FOR YEARS OF NEIGHBORHOOD ACTIVISM AND LIBRARY ADVOCATE

HON. ZOE LOFGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 10, 2002

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the achievements of Joyce Ellington and would like to recognize her extraordinary and tireless service to the residents and members of Northside Neighborhood Association.

Ellington has served on the board of San Jose's oldest neighborhood group, Northside Neighborhood Association (NNA) during its entire 36-year history. In addition to becoming the first African-American chair of San Jose's Library Commission in 1980, she was the driving force behind obtaining a library for the Northside area in the early 1970's. With help from then-Mayor Norm Mineta, another NNA original member, federal funding was obtained for the construction of the library.

In 2000, unbeknownst to Ellington, NNA proposed to rename the library in her honor and eventually petitioned the city council for approval.

The renaming of the library in Ellington's honor not only recognizes her achievements as a community activist, but is also a way to honor the diversity of San Jose, and in the Northside neighborhood, one of San Jose's oldest communities and where most African-American families lived in the turn of the century and early 1900's.

Ms. Ellington has lived in Northside for over 70 years and her home, built in 1908, is the oldest home in San Jose with continuing African-American inhabitants.

Joyce Ellington has devoted her life to enrich and advance her community, and her contribution deserves to be honored to serve as an inspiration for neighborhood children and for the residents of San Jose. I am proud and grateful to thank Joyce Ellington for reminding us all that one person can truly make a difference in the lives of many.

CENTRAL NEW JERSEY HONORS SERVICE ACADEMY NOMINEES

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 10, 2002

Mr. HOLT of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a group of very special young men and women from Central New Jersey. One of the most important duties of a Member of Congress, as well as one of the most enjoyable, is nominating students to the United States service academies. In an age when media portrayals of young people are increasingly negative, getting to know students through the nomination process is an important reminder of the patriotism, dedication, and excellence of America's youth.

From a pool of over 50 students from my district who went through the rigorous and time-consuming process of applying for a Congressional nomination, I am very proud to say that fourteen young women and men from Central New Jersey will be enrolling in America's service academies this year. They are the very best of an exceptional group, and I was proud to nominate them.

Two young people from the area will be attending the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York. I would like to recognize Saddie Colon of Eatontown and Adrian Gennusa of Holmdel.

Six young people from Central New Jersey will be attending the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland. I would like to recognize Nicholas Abbate of Middletown, Jillian Danback of Eatontown, John Michel of Cranbury, John Rundy of Holmdel, Sheila Singer of Princeton, and Kristin Strizki of Flemington.

Two young men from my district will be attending the United States Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, Colorado. I would like to recognize Kenneth Fenton of Oceanport and Matthew Vanderschuere of Princeton Junction.

Two young men from Central New Jersey will be attending the United States Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, New York. I would like to recognize Timothy Cain of Marlboro and Graham Mergenthaler of Colts Neck.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House joins me in noting the accomplishments of these young men and women, and in wishing them the best of luck at the service academies and in their careers.

IN RECOGNITION OF DETECTIVE OWEN HUGHES ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 10, 2002

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to Detective Owen Hughes, one of New York's finest, who will be retiring from the New York Police Department. For almost two decades he has served the Manhattan's 13th Precinct. Detective Hughes is beloved by the community for his accessibility, concern and attention to their needs.

Detective Hughes was born and raised in Queens, New York. He began his career with the New York Police Department by joining the Policy Academy, where he graduated in 1982. He performed his year-long field training in Queens and was assigned to the 13th Precinct in June of 1983.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

The 13th Precinct serves a diverse cross section of Manhattan which includes a substantial part of Manhattan's East Side. In 1985 Detective Hughes was selected to serve as Coordinator for the 13th Precinct's Community Policing Pilot Project. That led to his assignment to the Precinct's Community Affairs Office in June of 1985. There, Detective Hughes emerged as a dedicated and compassionate liaison between the Police Department and the community it is assigned to serve and protect. Among his many duties, he served as the Precinct's Youth Officer, which allowed him to work directly with the young people in the local community.

Detective Hughes was also trained as a Crime Prevention Officer, and in that capacity lectured on the subject of crime prevention.

For his outstanding record of achievement with the force, in 1990 Detective Hughes was promoted to Detective. In 1992 he worked to successfully establish a Precinct Law Enforcement Explorer Post. Among his most noteworthy and proudest accomplishments, Detective Hughes worked in tandem with the State Liquor Authority to shut down The Underground, a dangerous club formerly located on Manhattan's Lower East Side.

For his courageous service to the community, Detective Hughes has been honored with numerous awards, including the NYPD Commissioner's Award, which he received in 1993. He has also been awarded the 23rd Street Association Paul Gay Award for Community Service, the Korean Businessman Association Advisory Council Award, the Stein Senior Citizen Center Award, the Tilden Democratic Club Community Service Award.

For 22 years Detective Hughes has been married to his wife Susan. They have three children, Courtney, Owen Jr. and Ashley. For his years of serving and protecting the community, I ask that my colleagues join me in saluting Detective Owen Hughes.

GLOBAL SECURITY ACT OF 2002

HON. ELLEN O. TAUSCHER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 10, 2002

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, today I am proud to introduce the Global Nuclear Security Initiative Act of 2002 that was also recently offered in the Senate by Senator JEAN CARNAHAN.

The January 2001 report of the bipartisan task force chaired by former Senator HOWARD BAKER and former White House Counsel Lloyd Cutler has often been quoted but one of its conclusions bears restating today: "the national security benefits to U.S. citizens from securing and/or neutralizing the equivalent of more than 80,000 nuclear weapons and potential nuclear weapons would constitute the highest return on investment in any current U.S. national security defense program."

As you know, Mr. Chairman, our nonproliferation programs with Russia have improved America's national security greatly by dismantling Russia's nuclear facilities, finding jobs for their unemployed weapons scientists, and improving the security of Russian weapons and material. But as our relationship with Russia takes on a more cooperative definition, first with the signing of the Treaty on Strategic Offensive Reductions in Moscow and with the signing on May 28 in Rome of an agreement between NATO and Russia on a new working relationship, security threats arising from other nations with inadequately stored nuclear materials are increasing. Indeed, India and Pakistan's conflict over Kashmir has been escalating over the past several months and while tensions between the two countries are not new, unlike during the cold war, neither side has a clear idea of what actions would trigger a nuclear response from the other.

The challenges of translating some of our nonproliferation efforts to other countries of concern such as India, Pakistan, China or North Korea are significant but worth dealing with. While the nonproliferation programs of the Departments of Defense, Energy, and State are effective, they were not designed to meet the full range of terrorist threats now facing the United States. Expanding these programs to cover countries outside the former Soviet Union, to address the threat of radiological materials and to defend against the threat of terrorist sabotage of nuclear power plants abroad, is in the United States' national security interest.

The bill I am introducing today is an important first step in expanding America's defense against the threat of weapons of mass destruction. It calls on the Secretary of Energy, in consultation with the Secretaries of Defense and State, to develop a comprehensive program of activities to encourage all countries to adhere to the highest security standards for their nuclear facilities and material.

Second, the bill requires the Department of Energy to establish a systematic approach for securing radiological materials other than uranium and plutonium outside of the United States.

Finally, the bill requires the Department of Energy to develop plans for preventing terrorist attacks on nuclear power plants outside the United States. These are simple but important steps and I encourage my colleagues to support this legislation.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION COMMENDING THE PENNSYLVANIA NATIONAL GUARD FOR EXTRAORDINARY WARTIME SERVICE

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Monday, June 10, 2002

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce a measure honoring the citizen-soldiers of Pennsylvania. The soldiers and airmen of the Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard serve all America today in the cause of freedom, and they do so in record numbers. These brave men and women represent the best of our Commonwealth. They valiantly carry on the proud Pennsylvania tradition of service to state and country in peace and in war, a tradition born when Benjamin Franklin created the first Pennsylvania militia in 1747.

From the American Revolution to the present day, Pennsylvania militiamen and Guardsmen have been in the vanguard of the fight for American security and liberty. In peacetime our Guard has been relied upon to help combat floods, blizzards, narcotics and civil crises. In wartime, these civilians have accepted the role of armed defenders of liberty. Their deeds in war have been as glorious as their triumphs in peace. Tens of thousands of Pennsylvania militiamen fought with Washington for American Independence. Over 200 regiments fought in 24 campaigns of the Civil War. An entire division of Pennsylvania Guardsmen fought in the Spanish American War. Almost 14,000 Pennsylvania Guardsmen were wounded in World War I. In World War II, that same division of Pennsylvanians fought through Normandy, helped to liberate Paris, engaged the "West Wall" of Germany and fought fiercely in the Battle of the Bulge, losing 2,000 men. These same Pennsylvanians became the first unit to cross into Germany, presaging a successful end to that terrible war. Pennsylvania Guarsdmen also have served just as bravely in every military operation since World War II from Korea to Desert Storm.

Today, thousands of Pennsylvania Guardsmen prepare to deploy to Europe while thousands more rotate in and out of central Asia to defeat the forces of terror. Not since the Korean War has our Commonwealth parted with so many soldiers and airmen at one time. Pennsylvania families in over a hundred communities wait for their Guardsmen to return home safely to them, realizing that these heroes are prepared to make the ultimate sacrifice for our safety and, our liberty.

Mr. Speaker, prior to September 11, 2001, Pennsylvania's Army National Guard merited recognition as the largest Army Guard in the Nation and the home of the oldest division in the U.S. Army, the 28th Infantry Division. The 28th infantry was formed in 1879 and fought with such force and determination in the First World War, General Pershing dubbed these Keystone Guardsmen the "Iron Division." Their heroism and sacrifice at the Bulge earned them the appellation, the "Bloody Bucket" division, in World War II, a symbolic reference to the red keystone patch worn on their uniform and the horrendous casualties suffered in the forests of the Ardennes. Similarly, the Pennsylvania Air Guard ranked as the fourth largest in this country and was home to three superior air wings, the 171st Refueling Wing of Pittsburgh, the 111th Fighter Wing of Philadelphia, and the one-of-a-kind psychological warfare unit—the 193rd Special Operations Wing of Harrisburg—the most deployed U.S. Air Force or Air Guard unit.

Since the heinous and despicable attacks of 9/11, the men and women of the Pennsylvania National Guard have earned new recognition and respect as they serve throughout the country and the world in record numbers not seen since the Korean War. For these brave women and men are serving gallantly in Afghanistan and central Asia in the War Against Terror. They are serving nobly in the Balkans, ensuring peace and stability in Europe. They are serving heroically in the Middle East, enforcing the No-Fly Zone over Iraq, preventing future assaults by Saddam Hussein against his neighbors. And, they are serving laudably on the Northern border of the United States, in New York, and throughout Pennsylvania protecting our airports and nuclear power plants.

But this country has not finished asking of the men and women of the Pennsylvania National Guard. Our National Military Command has ordered the 28th Infantry Division of the Pennsylvania Army Guard to assume the lead role in SFOR operations this fall. Over one thousand soldiers of the 28th Infantry Division will mobilize, train and deploy for six months in the effort to secure peace in the Balkans. Despite this massive deployment, the National Military Command has ordered an even larger deployment of Pennsylvania Army Guardsmen. Beginning this fall, two thousand soldiers of the Pennsylvania Army Guard will deploy to Germany, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands to provide additional security for American military bases in those countries. The Keystone Taskforce will be stationed in Europe for six months and mobilize and train in the United States this summer. Already nearly a hundred engineers from the 201st Civil Engineering Flight Air Guard unit—a.k.a. Red Horse—has made its way to central Asia to build and repair runways, continuing the fight against Al Qaeda. And, all of this follows immediately upon the return of nearly 900 Pennsylvania Air Guardsmen of the 193rd Special Operations Wing who have been flying Commando Solo PSYOPS missions over Afghanistan consistently since October of last year as an essential part of Operation Enduring Freedom/Noble Eagle.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot mention every unit or every Guardsman who has contributed during this time of War in our struggle to preserve America's democratic way of life. Each and every soldier and airman of the Pennsylvania National Guard has contributed in some way. Simply by enlisting or seeking a commission they have made themselves ready to defend this great Nation in our time of need, and have earned our thanks. Yet, so many have been called upon since September 11th to serve at home and abroad, and so many more will be deploying in the future. Each and every one of our Guardsmen has made Pennsylvania proud, and those who will deploy overseas this fall will continue to bring honor to themselves, our Guard and our Commonwealth. For this they deserve the commendation of a proud and thankful Congress of the United States.

Credit must go first to the soldiers and airmen themselves who have taken on this responsibility with patriotism and courage. We must also thank the leadership of Pennsylvania's Guard units for training our men and women to serve in peace and war, providing them with the skills they need to defend our freedom here at home and abroad. They may be citizen-soldiers, but they are indubitably professionals thanks to the leadership of our Pennsylvania Guard. Those in Congress who commend our Guardsmen today will ensure that they receive the resource they need to fight and win wars. Moreover, we resolve to work even more closely with the leadership of the Pennsylvania National Guard to make sure our men and women are properly supported.

I would like to thank our Adjutant General, Major General William Lynch, a veteran fighter pilot and an exemplary leader. His stewardship of our Guard has brought credit to our Commonwealth and pride to our units. The Pennsylvania Guard stands ready to continue serving wherever and whenever called upon, under his command. My congratulations to Deputy Adjutant Generals James Skiff and Jessica Wright for ably leading our Air Guard and Army Guard through this demanding wartime period. I am confident that our forces remain in more than capable hands with Generals Skiff and Wright at the helm.

To our Army Guard unit commanders, Major General Walter Pudlowksi of the 28th Infantry Division, and his deputies Brigadier Generals John von Trott and Wesley Craig, I give my thanks. As they prepare to lead over three thousand Pennsylvanians into Europe to defend American interests abroad, they should know that this Congress supports them and places trust in their leadership.

To Brigadier General Steve Speer of the 193rd S.O.W. my gratitude for a job well done in leading 900 officers and enlisted Air Guardsmen in Operation Enduring Freedom. You are in desperate need of new equipment to replace the forty year old aircraft that you fly today. Yet you still fly critical missions around the globe and fly more frequently than any other unit in the United States. We will take care of you, and we will supply you with the equipment you need. We thank you for your leadership in our War Against Terror.

Let me extend my thanks also to Brigadier General William Boardley and Colonel Steve Sischo, commanders of the 171st and 111th Wings. Both have led their men and women admirably in Operation Southern Watch and Operation Enduring Freedom totaling over a thousand sorties for both wings combined in these wartime missions. Under your leadership our men and women have performed outstandingly under tough conditions.

The Pennsylvania Guard carries on its proud tradition and lives up to its motto: "Civilian in peace. Soldier in war." We are proud of each and every one of the 22,000 Guardsmen in uniform today. This Nation owes a debt of gratitude to all of them, and to their families. For us they sacrifice their precious time in peace and potentially so much more in war. I beseech my fellow Members of Congress to resoundingly express their gratitude today for the men and women of the Pennsylvania National Guard. Pass this resolution and send it to the Senate, so that those who serve will know that we honor them always.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1372, EXPORT-IMPORT BANK REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 5, 2002

Mr. STUPAK. Madam Speaker, I could not support this legislation that supports an organization that has acted directly against the interests of our domestic steel industry. Last year the Ex-Im Bank agreed to guarantee an $18 million loan to the Benxi Iron and Steel Company in China that allowed it to increase its steelmaking capacity. This decision, in the face of mounting bankruptcies of U.S. steel companies, was unbelievable. While our domestic steel companies were struggling for funds to keep themselves alive, the Ex-Im bank was promising funds overseas to Chinese steel.

There has been some talk that this conference report includes provisions to prevent such future lapses. I do not think that these provisions are sufficient. Furthermore, the conference committee actually took out a provision that would have required the Ex-Im Bank to reevaluate the Benxi loan guarantee. I cannot understand why this was done in the face of the ongoing crisis in the steel industry, and the clear impropriety of the Benxi decision.

I will not vote for this organization that has not stood with our domestic steel industry. I oppose this re-authorization—the Ex-Im Bank has shown through its actions that it does not merit our support until it can act responsibly and in our domestic interests.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE QUEENS GAZETTE

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 10, 2002

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to The Queens Gazette, a leading community newspaper in the New York City borough of Queens.

The twentieth anniversary of the Queens Gazette is cause for celebration across the borough from Astoria to Flushing, Long Island City to Jamaica. For two decades, the Gazette has been a premiere and outstanding publication for Queens residents who value accurate and timely news coverage and in-depth reports on the neighborhood issues that matter.

In recent months, the Queens Gazette has helped raise awareness in the community on issues that affect us all. These issues range from the need to stop the Asian Longhorned Beetle from killing our trees, to the successful quest for affordable housing in Astoria's Marine Terrace housing development. The Gazette has reported, with in-depth analysis, on the campaign for increased transit connections between Long Island City's residential areas, business sectors and new public parks, retail stores, and cultural institutions. The Gazette has also provided Queens readers with consistent and accurate reporting on efforts to make LaGuardia Airport safer. Clearly, the Gazette excels in providing comprehensive news coverage in many arenas. Information on such issues, and countless others, is invaluable to the members of our community.

I look to the Queens Gazette every week for thorough reports on local news, politics and governments affairs. I always appreciate the Gazette's special editions that focus on everything from social services in Queens to a review of entertainment and cultural activities for borough residents. I commend the entire staff at the Gazette for publishing an exemplary newspaper for the community and for being an excellent source for neighborhood news.

Congratulations to Tony Barsamian, Julie Wager, John Toscano, Linda Wilson and everyone at the Gazette for twenty years of excellence in journalism and outstanding public service for the people of Queens.

In recognition of its outstanding contributions to the community, I ask that my colleagues join me in saluting the Queens Gazette.

SENATE—Tuesday, June 11, 2002

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JON S. CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Dear God, think Your thoughts through us today. We want to love You with our minds and praise You with our intellects. We seek to be riverbeds for the mighty flow of Your wisdom through us. Teach us to wait on You, to experience deep calm of soul, and then to receive Your guidance. We spread out before You the decisions we must make. Thank You in advance for Your guidance. Give us the humility to trust You for answers and solutions, and then, grant us the courage to do what time alone with You has convinced us must be done. You are the author of all truth, the bottomless sea of understanding.

Send Your Spirit into our minds and illuminate our understanding with insight and discernment. We accept the admonition of Proverbs, Incline your ear to wisdom, and apply your heart to understanding; yes, if you cry out for discernment, and lift up your voice for understanding, if you seek her as silver, and search for her as for hidden treasures; then you will understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. For the Lord gives wisdom; from His mouth come knowledge and understanding.—Proverbs 2:2–6. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JON S. CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey, led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The assistant clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 11, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JON S. CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. CORZINE thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this morning the Chair will announce a period of morning business until 10:45, with the first half under the control of the majority leader or his designee and the second half under the control of the Republican leader or his designee.

At 10:45, the Senate will resume consideration of the hate crimes legislation, with 60 minutes of debate prior to a cloture vote at 11:45 a.m. So Senators would have until 10:45 a.m. today to file second-degree amendments to the bill.

The Senate will recess from 12:30 to 2:15 p.m. for the weekly party conferences.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 2578

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I am going to make a unanimous consent request at the present time. I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the cloture vote today, regardless of the outcome of that vote, the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 2578, the debt limit extension; that that bill be read the third time and the Senate vote on passage of the bill without any intervening action or debate.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, let me express my appreciation to the minority. This is something that the President desires us to do. We tried to work it out last week on the supplemental. We could not do it. This will bring it forward, as painful as it is, to increase the debt if something has to be done. The debt has been incurred, and we have to meet our obligation. That is my opinion.

I appreciate the cooperation of the Republican leadership and the members of the minority for allowing us to do this.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10:45 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

Under the previous order, the first half of the time shall be under the control of the majority leader or his designee.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventeen and a half minutes remain on the leader's time.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTIONS

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I have come to the Chamber today to talk about an issue about which I have spoken before and will continue to do so until we turn around the current climate we are facing, which is a rollback of environmental protections for the American people.

It is stunning to see what has happened to environmental regulations since administrations have changed. We have, fortunately, a group called the NRDC. I have a list of all the actions that have been taken by this administration since they took over. We have seen the average of one anti-environmental action every week since this administration took over.

This chart is way too small for people to read, but it gives a sense of the situation. I have two charts like this. These are 100 rollbacks. Our Nation certainly is in a situation where we are so focused on meeting the challenges that hit us on September 11—and it is very understandable; we are so united on that—but what has happened in the course of that time is that without very much publicity, a lot of these regulations have moved forward.

We face the circumstance where if we in the Senate and those in the House who care about the environment do not speak out, I fear for the future of our country.

Why do I say that? Because when one says the word "environment," it means many things, and one meaning is health and safety. For example, when this administration believed it was not so important that arsenic was in the water, finally the people woke up to what they were doing. Then when they said it was not so important to test poor kids for lead in their blood—even though we know if a child has elevated levels of lead in his or her blood, there is going to be a serious learning problem and illness problem, even problems of death—they went too far.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

It does not seem to stop them. In my State, they are against us as we are trying to protect the coastline. They are against us. They said to Florida: We will help you. But as to California, it is unbelievable. Interior Secretary Norton said people in California do not care about their coasts. Mr. President, I am here to say that is an insane statement if you look at the record.

Since the seventies, when under the Carter administration they thought they would drill, we convinced Carter not to drill. We thought that problem was over. The State has a moratorium on drilling off our shores. The fact is, we have set up sanctuaries all along the ocean. This is a terrible statement and an example of how the Bush administration is so blinded by this idea that the environment does not matter, they will say things that do not make sense.

My colleague from Illinois is in the Chamber, and I know he wants to add to this debate. First, I want to cover one more issue before I yield to him. I want to talk about one issue. It is called the Superfund.

I think it is very interesting that the Presiding Officer, as well as Senator TORRICELLI, are two leading proponents for doing something about Superfund sites.

The word "super" is a good word: You look super fine. The word "Superfund" is not a good word because what it means is that we have sites all over this country that are filled with poison and toxins, and we need to clean up these sites.

This chart shows there are national priority list sites in every single State but one. North Dakota is the only State. New Jersey happens to have the most. Pennsylvania is third. My own State has about 104 sites, and we are second on the list.

What I want to show my colleagues—and I hope the Senator from Illinois will pick up on this—is what is happening specifically to the Superfund program, which is such a popular program in this country. It cleans up these toxic sites. A lot of people live near these sites. Children live near these sites. It makes the sites safe, and it goes after the responsible parties, the polluters, and says the polluter pays, which is the basic premise of the Superfund program.

Under Bill Clinton's administration, we saw a ratcheting up of the cleanup: 88, 87, 85, 87 sites in the last 4 years. We were all set to continue. We were a little disheartened when President Bush said he is only going to clean up 75 sites, but worse than that happened. Now they are saying they are only going to clean up 47 sites, and then 40. We are going back down. We are going back down to a level, frankly, that we have not seen in more than a decade.

This is a horrible situation. I am proud that Senator CHAFEE has joined us, and we have bipartisan legislation to reinstate the Superfund fee so polluters will pay.

I am going to show one last chart because this is so important. This idea of "polluter pays to clean up their mess" has been basic to this country for many years, since Superfund was set up in the 1980s, and it led us to a situation where the industry and the polluters were paying 82 percent of the cleanup and taxpayers only 18 percent. That was where we could not find a party or we did not have enough funds in the Superfund trust fund.

This is where we are headed under President Bush. I consider this administration the most anti-environmental that I have ever seen, frankly. I have been in Congress since 1982, with Senator DURBIN, who is about to speak. In 2003, 54 percent of the cleanup in Superfund will be paid for by taxpayers; 46 percent by the industry that polluted. This is not a good trend for the American people, for the taxpayers, and that is why we have so much support for turning this around.

I am proud to be the chair of the environmental team that Senator DASCHLE has appointed to point out the environmental record of this administration and how it is hurting the health, safety, and well-being of the American people.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mrs. BOXER. I am happy to yield to my friend for as long as he would like.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank my friend for her leadership on the environmental issue, and I would like to get back to it, but I would like to ask the Senator to reflect with me for a minute on the larger issue, an issue of corporate responsibility, whether U.S. businesses will accept their responsibilities as part of America, their responsibility not only to their workers, their investors, and shareholders, but the consumers and America at large.

Time and time again, what we find with the Bush administration is they turn their back and ignore this issue of corporate responsibility. We now have a "Bermuda Triangle." This Bermuda Triangle is sucking in American jobs and American tax dollars as more and more corporations are moving their headquarters overseas. As they move their headquarters to Bermuda to avoid paying America's taxes, they are shirking their corporate responsibility to the United States.

When the Stanley Tool Company decided to move from the United States and put their corporate headquarters in Bermuda, did we hear any protests from this administration that they were shirking corporate responsibility? Not at all.

We saw in the paper yesterday that we now have the Norquist black list. Grover Norquist, one of the leading gurus of the Republican Party, has said he is creating a black list of those entities, organizations, and people in Washington who will not be acceptable and welcome in the Bush administration. They want their close circle of corporate friends to have entre to persuade this administration to move in the worst directions. They do not want to hear both points of view, the Norquist black list, part of this Bush administration philosophy.

It really comes through graphically on this issue of the Superfund. Who should pay for the toxic mess? The people who created the toxic mess or the taxpayers, the families of America?

What we are saying basically is if this burden is shifted to the taxpayers of America, corporate responsibility is abandoned. The corporations and businesses that create the mess should bear the burden of cleaning it up.

The Senator from California has made this point: In my State of Illinois, we have 39 sites on the Superfund list and 6 that have been formally proposed. Several others ultimately filled with PCBs, arsenic chlorinated solvents, and other harmful compounds will qualify. The Bush administration says the corporations and industries responsible for this mess should not pay for it; American families, workers, and taxpayers ought to pay for it. Where is corporate responsibility in this administration?

Mrs. BOXER. I am really pleased my friend has tied this into the bigger picture, because this particular chart shows it all. The Bush administration is moving away from corporate responsibility when it comes to cleaning up the worst toxic sites in America. They are cleaning up half the number of sites. We do not know. We cannot tell.

I am the chair of the Superfund Committee and the Environment Committee. The bottom line is, I cannot even tell whether the sites of the Senator from Illinois are going to be cleaned up because this administration is keeping that information secret.

To get to the point about corporate responsibility, having faced the Enron scandal, and continuing to face it in California, let me state what this means. It means corporations could care less about the people they serve. They tell their own employees to buy Enron stock while the insiders sell out. The shareholders were the last people they thought about. It is a lack of a corporate ethics.

When this administration writes an energy plan, they talk to these very same corporations that essentially turn their back on the American people. As my friend, Senator MIKULSKI, brought up at a meeting we both attended today, some of these corporate executives renounced their citizenship in order to get away with not paying any taxes. They leave the greatest country in the world, which gave them every opportunity to fulfill the American dream, and they throw it all away for dollars and cents.

There is little corporate ethic in America. There are some very good corporations. Why not say to those good corporations: We appreciate what you are doing; join with us. Let us get back a corporate ethic.

On the Norquist black list that my colleague referred to, I thought it was interesting when Ari Fleischer was asked about it in his press conference. He said: I have no comment because we have nothing to do with it. I found that amazing. Does he have no comment on terrorism? He has nothing to do with that. Does he have no comment when something horrible happens around the world that we have nothing to do with? Since when is it that there is suddenly silence when it comes to a black list? I think it is a political embarrassment to them.

More than that, what worries me is they are not distancing themselves from this issue. I hope in America there is room for all kinds of views. When Vice President CHENEY put together the energy plan, they did not want any views from people who had what I would call the public interest versus the special interest. I worry about this small circle around this President that does not hear from people who may have a different view.

Mr. DURBIN. If the Senator will yield for another question, I think we should make it clear what this Norquist black list is all about. Grover Norquist is one of the conservative gurus in the Republican Party. He is now joining in what he calls his "K Street Project" with other conservatives. They are really creating a black list of people with which this administration will not deal. People who are fighting for the environment, people who are fighting for human rights, people who are trying to protect the rights of individuals to have health care, people who are trying to protect consumers will be part of the Norquist black list.

Now what the Bush administration is saying is that they really do not know that they want to comment on this. They should comment on it immediately and reject it. They ought to denounce it. This is unacceptable, whether the President is a Democratic or Republican. Every President should be open to every point of view. They may come down and reach a different conclusion, but to create a black list, as Grover Norquist has for those who are standing up and fighting and basically representing the families of America, is plain wrong.

I ask the Senator from California, do we not see this coming back at us in so many different ways? The Senator mentioned Enron, the weak stock market, and the lack of confidence in corporate America. Should we not have leadership from the White House saying we demand corporate responsibility? We do not find that, do we, in this administration response?

Mrs. BOXER. No, we do not find it. As a matter of fact, I am waiting for some indictments on the Enron case, to be honest.

Mr. DURBIN. Not one so far.

Mrs. BOXER. Not one so far. We now know because other whistleblowers are telling us that they set the pace for the energy industry. This was the biggest transfer of wealth from ordinary American families to the pockets of these people. It is extraordinary.

Overlay the whole Enron scandal and anyone can see that California was used as a cash cow to keep Enron afloat while the insiders sold their stock. I have seen videotapes of the highest executives at Enron telling the poor employees—as these top executives were unloading their stock—buy more stock. They wanted to see that the stock was artificially held up and have more people and more employees buying so they could sell out.

I look at the word "patriotism" perhaps in a different way than others. Patriotism extends to a very broad range. When I say this, I mean if you are truly patriotic and love this country, yes, you stand with this President in the war against terror. But it extends to the way you treat people in your life, Americans who get up in the morning and work hard, single moms, people with illness who want prescription drugs. To make this the greatest country is making sure we have a strong middle class to buy the products that business makes, to be able to educate their children so this country continues to be the greatest in the world.

When you put greed ahead of the American families in this country and their rights and forget your responsibilities, where is the patriotism there?

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield?

I have met with business leaders in Chicago from good businesses, from across Illinois, and they are saying the same thing. They are ashamed of what has happened with Enron. They are ashamed of what they are seeing in this area of corporate irresponsibility. They believe they are good Americans creating profit for their shareholders and job opportunities and good products. They are looking for leadership from Washington. Usually business says, Washington, hands off, stay away from us.

Many times they are asking, What are you going to do to help us clean up the mess when it comes to accounting standards and energy regulation? We need leadership from Washington. Yet there is little or nothing coming from this administration when it comes to corporate responsibility. For the sake of this country, for the sake of the good companies in this country, those that are responsible, we need an administration that will speak out now to restore confidence to the American people in our economy, in our business structure, in our stock market. Yet the only thing we hear is the Norquist blacklist. They are going to blacklist certain people from having access to this administration if they deign to speak on behalf of consumers and average people. That sort of thing is totally unacceptable. It is an ethic we should not accept from either political party in this Nation.

I ask the Senator from California if she has heard the same thing from responsible business leaders in her State.

Mrs. BOXER. There is no doubt about it. They are embarrassed by what has happened—the corporate executives who take home millions and millions of dollars and then do not pay their taxes, corporate executives who do not care about their employees and destroy not only their employees' jobs but their pensions. It is a moment in our history where they are looking to us for leadership.

The way I tie it into the environment and health and safety is this: I showed on the floor the environmental record for 2001. This is the record for 2002. Each week, there is another plan to weaken environmental laws and protect the people. It is a terrible message to corporate America.

This chart shows the EPA budget. They eliminated the budget for graduate student research in the environmental sciences.

Look at enforcement. Good businesses welcome enforcement. If you are doing it right and the enforcers come in, you are in good shape. They cut it back, and the bad apples do not get caught.

Look at air quality, nuclear waste, endangered species, mining public lands, something my colleague is involved in, oil and gas drilling, urban sprawl.

This administration zeroed out the funding for urban parks. I would love my friend to comment on this point: 70 percent of our people live within reach of an urban park. Unbelievably, 2 weeks ago the administration sent out a press release bragging about all the grants they made from last year's money, not mentioning in this press release they have now zeroed out the funding for urban parks.

This lack of caring for the people of this country, as I see it, in terms of the environment and this kind of a record set a poor example for everyone, for business leaders. If business leaders see this administration does not really care, when it comes to the environment, about the health and safety of the people, what is the subtle message to a corporate executive? I guess: I don't have to care. I guess the bottom line is my profit.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask the Senator from California to reflect on this. It is not as if this administration cannot find money. When it comes to tax breaks for the wealthiest people in our country, they can find plenty of money. When it comes to an urban park—which is what many working families look forward to on a Sunday afternoon, whether it is in San Francisco, Los Angeles, or Chicago, a place to go with your family and enjoy yourself on Sunday afternoon—the administration says we cannot afford urban parks but we can afford a tax break so that the multimillionaires in this country can go to private clubs and can enjoy a lifestyle that involves a lot of privacy.

For the average working-class family, their lifestyle involves fun perhaps on a Sunday afternoon on the Lake Michigan shoreline or going to an urban park in and around the city of Chicago.

It really is a choice. It is not as if the Bush administration is saying there is just no money for anything. They found money when it came to tax breaks for the wealthiest people in America. When it comes to putting money into America to protect our environment, to protect for prescription drugs under Medicare, for a tax deduction for college education expenses, to give a tax break to small businesses to offer health insurance, this administration cannot see it. It casts a blind eye.

Mrs. BOXER. The point is the message it is sending, subtle or not so subtle, to corporate America, about what is important. There is a relationship between the two.

This chart shows the clean water rule. The administration reverses a 25-year-old Clean Water Act rule that flatly prohibits disposal of mining and other industrial wastes into the Nation's waters. The EPA issued new regulations making it legal for coal companies to dump fill material—dirt, rock, and waste—from mountaintops, moving mining into rivers, streams, lakes, and wetlands.

My point is, if this administration that is charged with protecting the environment, as we are, is so callous about the quality of the water for the people of this country, the not so subtle message to corporate America is: People don't matter that much; just make your profit because we really don't care.

It is stunning. That is why I am glad my friend was here. This connection between this record, which I think is so unmindful of the needs of the American people, does translate over to short-term thinking in corporate America, to thinking that it really is not important to care about the environment, your people, or their health and their welfare reform.

Mr. DURBIN. Did we not go through this same debate on the energy bill a few weeks ago? The Senator and I were coming to the floor and saying, if you want to lessen America's dependence on foreign oil, if you want more energy security, take a look at the No. 1 consumer of oil in this country—the cars and trucks we drive. Have more fuel efficiency and fuel economy. Forty-six percent of the oil we import goes into our cars and trucks. A number of Members came to the floor and said let's improve fuel economy of cars and trucks in America to lessen our dependence on foreign oil. The corporate interests came in and said no, no change, no improvement.

What it means is, we passed an energy bill which fails to address the most basic element of developing energy security, energy independence, and a cleaner environment for America. It literally has been 17 years since we improved the fuel economy of cars and trucks. When we look at this, time and again, it is corporate irresponsibility that turns its back on the environment and energy security for this country.

As the Senator from California has pointed out, this is a pattern which is emerging through this administration. Instead of leading us toward more responsible conduct, as individuals, as families, and as businesses, they are turning their back on corporate responsibility.

I think it all comes together. I think the environmental issue plays into the energy issue and, frankly, the vote we had on the floor where, 67 to 32, the Senate rejected improving fuel efficiency in cars and trucks across America was a shameful vote. It is a vote which, frankly, we are going to have to answer for decades to come.

I ask the Senator from California, whose State has led when it comes to fuel standards and clean air and fuel efficiency, whether she believes this is all part of the same issue?

(Ms. STABENOW assumed the chair.)

Mrs. BOXER. I say to my friend, it is. It is short-term thinking. It is not good for this country. If you want to talk about patriotism, the most patriotic thing you can do, it seems to me, is drive a car that doesn't use all that foreign oil. It is very hard to get such a car, an American car particularly.

It is interesting my friend raised this because he is right. The Senate was weak on this, shamefully weak. But we did not get any help from Vice President CHENEY when, on June 18, 2001, he announced to General Motors executives that the Bush administration has no plans to pursue higher fuel efficiency standards. That set the tone.

When this administration came in, many of us did say there were so many ties to energy, so many ties to oil companies, that we were very worried. But some of us thought maybe, because of that, the administration would bend over backwards to be fair, to lean on this issue. We were sorely disappointed.

If one could sit down and really think it through, we are talking about a very unwise strategy on the part of this administration to not look ahead, to not plan for the future, to not care about your grandchildren or my grandchildren having the opportunity to see the beauty of this country; to not worry that much if the quality of the air goes down or the quality of the water; to convince yourself the environmental laws are a burden on industry. That is disproven and untrue.

My friend talks about California. We have been the leader on environmental protection. We have found when you clean up the environment you create jobs. There has been study after study. One of our best exports happens to be environmental technologies. So by turning away from a clean and healthy environment as a goal to help our people, you are also blocking a very important piece of our economy, a place where we are way ahead.

I remember when the wall fell in eastern Europe, one of my friends who went there said: The trouble is, now you can actually see the air. They had not done anything about air pollution.

I know my friend is leaving. I am about to end what I am saying. But I thank him so much for tying together this horrific anti-environmental record, the anti-environmental record of this administration, to the whole issue of corporate greed, of corporate irresponsibility. We are seeing more and more of the big corporations really turning their back on the people they are supposed to serve, frankly—their customers; the people they are supposed to help, their employees; their shareholders, just using this very shortsighted type of reasoning that this administration uses, which is get it all now and don't worry about the future.

If you take the issue of CO_2 emissions, we had a President who promised that, although he was against Kyoto, he would come up with a plan to cut those emissions back. That is the problem that causes global warming. I don't know of any respected scientists today who say global warming is not a dreadful problem. What it could do to our agricultural products, what it could do to our Nation, what it would mean for the world, is devastating.

It is not a question of panicking about it. It is a question of doing something about it. It is not that hard to do, if we set our mind to it.

This administration's Environmental Protection Agency sent a report to the United Nations where they admitted, yes, there is global warming and, yes, it is caused by human beings, and, yes, it is bad. Now this administration, this President, is backing away from his own administration, what they said. He said: Gee, I really don't agree with that "bureaucracy."

I don't get it. This is his Environmental Protection Agency. And the thrust of the report, even though it admitted there were problems, basically said there are these problems but we have to learn to live with them.

I do not understand why people go into Government, would join the Environmental Protection Agency, would run for President or the Senate or the House to say: "You know, it's a problem." And throw up their hands.

That is not what we are about. Our job is to find solutions to problems, to lay those problems out. I know the Senator who is in the Chair is taking the lead in finding solutions to the problem of the high cost of prescription drugs, not only for our seniors but for all of our citizens. She is working long and hard on that, day in and day out, and with her leadership and that of others in the Senate, we are going to come up with a good plan.

I know our leader, TOM DASCHLE, is going to come up with a very good plan that we can all back, on all fronts, dealing with Medicare but also dealing with the pricing of prescription drugs.

You could throw up your hands and just say, "Isn't this awful, prices are going up," and walk away. Why would we deserve to be here if we took that attitude? Why do we deserve to be here if we do not protect people's health—by getting them prescription drugs, but also preventing the health problems that you get when you have dirty air and water and high levels of arsenic and high levels of lead in children's blood.

It is one thing to react at the end of it when they have these illnesses. We need these pharmaceuticals. It is another thing to prevent these problems because many come from a very unhealthy environment.

I am sorry to say that this administration's record in 2001—and let's show 2002—an average of once a week, coming up with an anti-environmental rule, rolling back a pro-environmental, prohealth rule. This record is shameful. I think it is only because we have been so focused, as we have to be, on other issues, that we have not, as Americans, stood up to say this is a terrible circumstance.

I will show the Superfund. I will leave with that one more time, to show the number of sites they are cutting back on the Superfund. Remember, in California 40 percent of Californians live within 4 miles of a Superfund site. I am sure, Madam President, if you examine the Superfund sites in your State—you have many, as unfortunately many of us do, and we will give the exact number later—you will see what is happening. There is a walking away from the responsibility to clean up these sites, which means these sites will remain very dangerous.

We have a site in New Jersey that has become infamous because the wildlife there is turning bright colors from the dioxin that is in the soil, the arsenic that is in the soil, the dangerous chemicals that are in the soil. The EPA will not tell us, Madam President, from which of your sites they are walking away. We are trying desperately to get the information.

Senator JEFFORDS, who is a man of tremendous patience, I can tell you, started trying to get the information in March. We sent a letter and said that we now see you promised to clean up 75 sites. Now you say it is only 47. That is down from 87 sites under the last administration. Tell us, pray tell, which sites are you abandoning? Our people have a right to know. It impacts their lives; it impacts the lives of their children; it impacts the property values in the community. Just tell us which sites you are not going to clean up.

We found in the hearing we held that, in fact, a message went out to all the employees at EPA not to talk to anyone. Don't tell Senators which sites are off the list; don't tell newspapers; refer all the calls to our communications people.

The penchant for secrecy in this administration is growing to be alarming. We couldn't find out who sat in on Vice President CHENEY's meeting when they drew up this energy bill. We had to go to court to find out. Now we know. It was the special interests that wrote that. We know what happens then.

That is not the kind of America we want. We want an America where everyone sits around the table—people from the environmental community, people from the business community, people from the labor community, people from the management community. That is the way we are going to have an America that works for everyone—not when we leave out people with whom we don't agree.

I represent a State which is very diverse in thinking. We go from very liberal to very conservative and everything in between. If I just sat with the people who voted for me, that would be a huge mistake for me; plus, it would be unfair and wrong.

We need to sit with people with whom we don't always agree. That is why this Norquist blacklist is so upsetting, as Senator DURBIN said. If we put a little X on the forehead of people who do not agree with us, and we put them on a blacklist and we never talk to them, what kind of America is this going to be? It is going to be an extremist America—an America that doesn't reflect the values of the American people.

One of the values of the American people is a clean and healthy environment. I hope people will educate themselves to the fact that we cannot find out which Superfund sites are not going to be cleaned. I hope people will understand the danger they face if this continues.

I pledge today to continue to come to the Chamber to talk about this environmental issue, to fight for the Superfund Program, and to fight for clean air and clean water. We are going to take this case to the American people.

I thank the Chair very much. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time controlled by the majority has expired. The remaining time until 10:45 is controlled by the minority leader.

Mrs. BOXER. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Chair.

ROLE OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, we always have different kinds of things to talk about and issues that are before us. That is our job, of course, to deal with the issues. There is no end to the number of issues that come here. We focus on them, as we should. In addition to that, however, it seems to me that it is appropriate from time to time that we focus a little bit on the appropriate role of the Federal Government.

What is the appropriate role of Government spending? I understand the pressures that come from wanting to do something about every problem, partly because we do want to do something about every problem, and partly because of the politics of it. Now we find ourselves getting more and more into the kind of setting, a kind of culture, if you please, where, as the Federal Government continues to grow, every issue that arises—at whatever the level—the first request is let us get the Federal Government involved; let us get some money from the Federal Government; let us get some programs from the Federal Government. So continuously we get larger.

If you walk down the street and ask in general terms if you think the Federal Government ought to be larger, if you think it ought to be less large, if the issues ought to be considered more close to the people where they have more input at the State and local level, the answer is yes.

I believe we need to stand back from time to time and take a look at what we are doing in terms of the future, and maybe try to get some vision of where we want to be in the next 10 years or 15 years.

What do we want our society to look like in terms of government? Do we want a national government for everyone? I don't think so. That is not what we are. This is the United States of America. We are a federation of States. The Federal Government's role is fairly well defined in the Constitution, and those things not there are to be left to the States. But we move the other way.

I am not anti-Federal Government. I think there is obviously a very serious role for the Federal Government. One of them we are exercising now is defense. That, obviously, is a Federal role, and one that we should and are pursuing.

But take a look at all the things we are in. Take a look at all of the little things in the supplemental budget which we passed last week, and tell me that those are Federal responsibilities—all of those little items in there that we are funding. I am sorry, they are clearly not.

It seems to me that we have to take a look at the concept. I think some of the things we are looking at now are very important. One of them is Medicare. Obviously, Medicare is a Federal program. But we need to take a look at it and see where it is going over time to be other than just patching here or patching there or putting a little more money in there, and then come to the Chamber and complain about not having enough money. But we never seem to look at where we might be.

I am a little frustrated at the feeding frenzy at the public trough of the Federal Government that we have been engaged in over the past several decades. As a matter of fact, I think that is going to be more difficult as we go forward.

First of all, of course, we need to debate and pass a responsible bipartisan budget resolution. To most people, the budget means you have a budget which hopefully you can stay within. If you can't, you can't. It means more than that here. A budget, of course, is some limitation on what you are spending. That is what your plan is, and that is what you are doing. But, in addition to that, there are some restraints that can be used here on the floor of the Senate.

If an appropriations or spending bill goes beyond the budget that we have established, then it becomes more difficult. You have to have more votes to pass it.

It is a very important thing. Here we are without one, I think, for the first time in 27 years. Certainly, we need one. We need to take a long look at some of these appropriations bills that are coming up. We need to do that very soon. We will be talking about hundreds of billions of dollars in expenditures.

Of course, we should be helping to strengthen education. What is the role of the Federal Government in education? Now it contributes about 7 percent to elementary secondary education—most of it in special education. But we continue to look there for more and more money. There are all kinds of recommendations to do that.

I think one of the interesting ones that I run into—and the Presiding Officer does as well—in terms of the Finance Committee is taxes, tax changes, tax credits—tax this and tax that. Every day something comes up that someone wants to give a tax credit for some certain kind of behavior. Then the next day we come to the Chamber and say the tax system is too complicated. It is complicated because every day we use it more to affect behavior than we do for raising money. There is just no end to it. Let us give a tax credit to do this or give a tax credit to do that or we will give a tax credit to help build small communities or give a tax credit for charitable giving or whatever, all of which on their face are nice ideas. But if you step back and say what the role of the Federal Government is in that, then I think maybe you would have to take a closer look at what is really happening. It is one that I believe is very important.

There is constitutional direction, as I mentioned. Some people interpret that in different ways. But, nevertheless, it does indicate that there is a limit to what the Federal Government should do. I don't know. I suppose different States have different things. A good deal of Wyoming belongs to the Federal Government. So one of the things I hear the most is there is too much Government regulation—Federal regulations that impact everybody—probably more than anything else.

The Senator from California was talking about environmental restrictions. That is all I hear—an excessive amount of non-use restrictions on public property—and the idea that you don't have access to the Federal lands that belong to the people. The access, obviously, ought to be limited so that you preserve the environment. But the idea that you have to have roadless areas so you cannot access the property, the idea you cannot go to Yellowstone Park in a snow machine, even though the snow machine can probably be made cleaner than an automobile—these kinds of things are constantly there. At the same time, we want the Federal Government to get bigger, with more regulations. It is quite a frustrating thing. I know it is difficult, but we need to take a look at really where we want to be.

Last summer in Wyoming, I had a series of meetings, two in almost every county; we called it Vision 20/20. We asked people to share with us what they saw in the future for their families, their town, their county, and their State. It was interesting. Of course, it was different in different parts of the State, but several things were pretty unanimous. It would be fun to have this body sit down for a day and say: What do you see as the role of the Federal Government? What do you see the Senate doing in terms of spending, in terms of programs 15 years from now? Do we want to continue to spend the way we have over the last several years? If so, what would be the totals?

A couple years ago, we tried pretty much to have some limitations and held the general budget to about 3 percent, which was basically inflation. This year, notwithstanding terrorism and the necessary emergency spending, it is probably 8 percent—probably more than that, close to a 10-percent increase in Government spending.

Of course, we will hear from our friends on the other side of the aisle that the problem is because of tax reductions. I don't agree with that. Tax reductions are necessary when you have a slow economy, to get things going. Tax reductions help us plan to see the kind of Federal Government we really want—perhaps one with a smaller role—and identifying those things that are clearly the role and responsibility of the Federal Government; perhaps reducing Federal taxes so locals can have more taxes, to do with it what they want.

One of the things I think most of us, I suppose from every State, work on more than anything else is what a bill or a proposal means in terms of our States. For instance, health care. I come from a rural State. Health care delivery in Wyoming is quite different than it is in New York City, so a Federal program that is designed for metropolitan areas doesn't fit at all. There has to be enough flexibility. The same is true with education and most everything else we do. But we don't always give that flexibility. So we find ourselves with programs designed to go nationwide which don't fit nationwide. Yet because we constantly have these Federal programs going, it is most difficult.

I mentioned to you that we are always saying we need to simplify taxes. Yet we use them to affect behavior more than almost anything. The size of the Government continues to grow. We worked very hard last year to get the bill passed that required agencies to look at their activities, and those that are not totally governmental could be put out into the private sector for private contracting. I think it is an excellent idea to try to keep the Government as small as possible. Some of our folks are opposed to that idea; they want more and more Government and more and more Government employees. Those things that are not certified Government things ought to be dealt with in the private sector.

So I know these are general comments and you don't have an answer for all these issues, but there is a frustration that builds as you go through everything we look at every day, and more and more bills being talked about.

As an example, we are going to have hearings this afternoon on the Park Subcommittee, which I used to chair. I love parks. But there need to be some criteria as to what a national park should be. Failing having criteria, what they say in every community that has an area they would like to develop and set aside is, let's get the Federal Government to take it over and let it be some kind of a Federal park. It is not a Federal park just by its definition. But I understand when we are working for something in our States—some call it pork, and some call it other things, but it doesn't matter—we don't look at the broad picture, we just look at that. It is difficult.

So I am hopeful we can take a long look at what we are doing and, as opposed to simply dedicating ourselves to an election in 2002—to which I think you will find many of these things are very related—let's take a little longer look at where we are going to be. That is really our job for the future. These young pages sitting here, where are they going to be 20 years from now? We have some responsibility to look at that. I think it is a very strong responsibility.

So I hope we can put our emphasis a little more on our responsibility as the Federal Government, how we can best do that, what it means in the future, how we can help build the strength of local and State governments so that it will be close to the people and the people can indeed have a real role in what is being managed in their area.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, as I understand it, the time between now and 11:45 a.m. is equally divided, and at 11:45 a.m., we will vote on the cloture motion on the hate crimes legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 625, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> A bill (S. 625) to provide Federal assistance to States and local jurisdictions to prosecute hate crimes, and for other purposes.

Pending:

> Hatch amendment No. 3824, to amend the penalty section to include the possibility of the death penalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I wish to briefly review where we are on this issue involving releasing the other arm of the Federal Government to fight hate crimes.

This is an issue that has been before the Congress since 1997. We reported the legislation out of the committee in 1999. It is the year 2002, and we still, in this body and in the House of Representatives, have been unwilling, unable to pass legislation that is going to permit the Federal Government to fight terrorism at home. That is what hate crimes are all about.

I am always surprised that we are unable to break the logjams. This legislation has been before the Senate. We voted on this legislation about a year ago as an amendment to the Defense authorization bill. The vote was 57 to 42.

So we had strong bipartisan support for that legislation. Then we get to the conference and the Republican leadership in the House of Representatives said no.

What we really need is to have the legislation passed free and clear, meaning no amendments attached to the legislation, in spite of the fact that 232 Members of the House of Representatives, Republicans and Democrats, understood as well that we ought to be fighting hate and terror at home. That is what this is all about, whether we are going to deal with the insidious hate crimes that continue to exist in this country and which, in too many instances, are not prosecuted.

We have the strong support of those in the law enforcement area. Twenty-two State attorneys general support it; 175 law enforcement, civil rights, civic, and religious organizations; and 500 diverse religious leaders from across the Nation.

We have to ask ourselves: Why are we really being blocked from permitting the Senate to address an issue which we have already addressed and which is in great need at home? And that is the hate crime issue.

It is an outrage that Congress continues to be AWOL in the fight against hate crimes. Hate crimes are terrorist acts. They are modern-day lynchings designed to intimidate and terrorize whole communities.

Our Attorney General in this past year has said:

> Just as the United States will pursue, prosecute and punish terrorists who attack America out of hatred for what we believe, we will pursue, prosecute and punish those who attack law abiding Americans out of hatred for who they are. Hatred is the enemy of justice, regardless of its source.

In the same speech:

> Criminal acts of hate run counter to what is best in America, our belief in equality and freedom. The Department of Justice will aggressively investigate, prosecute and punish criminal acts of violence and vigilantism motivated by hate and intolerance.
> Our message this morning is unambiguous and clear. The volatile poisonous mixture of hatred and violence will not go unchallenged in the American system of justice.

That is what this legislation is all about, to try to make sure we are going to prosecute these acts of violence that are based upon bigotry and hatred and that affect not only the individuals who are involved but also affect the whole community.

Many of us thought, after September 11 and after the extraordinary loss of lives, after the extraordinary acts of heroism, there was a new spirit in America. I believe that to be so. I think it is true. It is reflected in so many different areas. We are reaching out to understand our communities. We are reaching out to understand our neighbors and friends. We have a strong understanding that America, in many respects, is closer, bonded together in order to try to resist the acts of terror that are at home but also understand the values which are important to each other.

Within that spirit, it is amazing to me that we as a country are so prepared to assault those cells of hatred as they exist in other parts of the world and refuse to address them at home. That is what this legislation is really all about. That is why we need this legislation. It is very simple.

I see my friend and colleague. I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield such time as he may consume to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Madam President, each day I have detailed in the Senate RECORD another hate crime. Again, these are always violent, they are always sickening, but they always happen to an American citizen. These citizens are not different from you and me. They are Americans. They may be black, they may be gay, they may be disabled, female or of Middle Eastern descent, and yet they are all Americans. We are all, in that important aspect, the same.

I will detail a heinous crime that occurred in the State of Oregon in 1995. I have spoken about this horrible crime before in this Chamber. A 27-year-old Stockton, CA, man murdered a Medford, OR, couple: Roxanne Ellis, 53, and Michelle Abdill, 42. The women, who ran a property management business together, disappeared on December 4, 1995, after showing a man an apartment for rent. He shot them both in the head. The bodies were left bound and gagged in the truck bed. The Stockton man later confessed, saying he had targeted the women because they were lesbians, and he figured they would not have families that would miss them.

I believe the government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harm that comes out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substantive. I believe that by passing this legislation we can change hearts and we can change minds.

I have noted, starting Friday, continuing most of the day Monday and today as well, that the opponents of this bill, I think, truly have an argument against the larger category of hate crimes. Their argument should not be the inclusion of these new categories of Americans whose minority subjects them to greater vulnerability. This is easy to demonstrate in crime statistics. An argument can be made that hate crimes are inappropriate, that all crime is hateful. This is an argument that has been made many times and in several cases that have reached the U.S. Supreme Court, but the Supreme Court has upheld the category of hate crimes.

So the question for us then becomes: Why not extend them to new categories of Americans who are demonstrably more vulnerable to crime? I argue once again that we should vote in the affirmative to include these new categories. I call on my colleagues to support it.

I have heard many arguments being propounded as to why we should not proceed. I believe we should proceed. I believe we should invoke cloture and get on with a final vote on this bill.

I will say, in defense of my colleagues, particularly our Republican leader, TRENT LOTT, in the rare case when he would invoke cloture early on a bill, he was roundly criticized by our friends on the other side. I wish cloture had not been invoked as quickly in this case so we might have a better chance of winning this vote. I say to my colleagues, this may be their only vote. I am given to understand that this bill will be pulled down if cloture is not invoked, and I think that is a very unfortunate development, because the time to do this is now, and the time to have effectively argued this is beginning Friday, Monday, today, and this week.

So I will be very disappointed, as one who has been present each of these days making this case, if this bill is pulled down because cloture is not invoked.

There may well be some good ideas that could be brought forward, but I think personally it is easy to distinguish between the meritorious arguments that can be made, such as some that Senator HATCH has been making, versus those that are designed to create political TV ads and to pull down this bill. It takes courage in the Senate to push the case, to make the case, and to stay with the case until this body has had time to work its will, but I fear that may not be allowed to occur now, which I regret. I wish more Senators had come the last 3 days to argue on the merits of this bill.

Every day I have entered a hate crime in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to demonstrate the need for this legislation. If by having a hate crimes law that covered James Byrd, the Federal Government was able to be helpful to the officials of Texas, why not have a hate crimes law that could have helped the police officers of Wyoming to pursue and prosecute the case against Matthew Shepard? This is about permitting the Federal Government to show up to work. This is about the Federal Government standing with the American people and saying, as to these values, as to opposing crimes so horrible and callous, we will stand united with law enforcement at every level, locally and federally.

This is not an effort on the part of the Federal Government to subvert State law or local police processes. This is an ability to enhance them, to backstop them, to make sure we get the job done. It is a law that is 30 years old. It is a law that ought to be expanded because of our experience. It is a law that we ought to vote on in its final form when this week's work comes to an end.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. I am happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDWARDS). The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator makes a very good point that Congress went on record 32 years ago that we were going to have a Justice Department that was going to prosecute hate crimes. We have addressed that particular issue. We have made the decision.

During the more than 30 years since the current hate crimes law was passed, the Federal Government on average, has prosecuted only four hate crimes per year. By working cooperatively, state and federal law enforcement officials have the best chance of bringing the perpetrators of hate crimes swiftly to justice.

Now, as the Senator points out, another frequent argument we hear against the hate crimes bill. Opponents argue that the law is unnecessary because these crimes already are prosecuted at the State level. In the past thirty years, Congress has enacted dozens of federal drug and gun laws that criminalize conduct that already is illegal under state law. We didn't pass these laws because States were failing to their job, but rather because we believed that the Federal government had an important role to play in helping States combat violent crime. Our motivation in passing the hate crimes bill is no different.

The most important benefit of both state and federal criminal jurisdiction is the ability of state and federal law enforcement officials to work together as partners in the investigation and prosecution of serious hate crimes. When federal jurisdiction has existed in the limited areas authorized by current law, the federal government's resources, forensic expertise, and experience in the identification and proof of hate-based motivations have often provided valuable investigative assistance to local authorities without usurping the traditional role of states in prosecuting crimes.

We made a judgment, and even though there were State laws, we were going to pass this because there was an important interest in doing it.

Can the Senator find anything more important than trying to attack the basic core, the bias and hatred that motivates people to commit these crimes and make sure that we have a Justice Department that will be able to fight this with both arms, rather than one arm tied behind its back?

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. I agree with the Senator. We are in a war on terrorism in this world. It is entirely appropriate to focus on the war on terrorism at home. President Bush has proposed a more seamless process by which we backstop as a Federal Government local and State police and all law enforcement in our ability to protect the American people.

I believe government should help Americans as it finds them. Where there is a clearly demonstrated need, particularly as to gays and lesbians, we should show up to help. I believe the Senator would agree with me that in the case of James Byrd, where this African-American brother was dragged to death in a hate crime, the Federal Government, because the statute permits the category of race, was helpful. It did not subvert the local pursuit and prosecution of the murderers of James Byrd. We backstopped it. We brought the good offices and the resources and the expertise to be helpful to Texas in that case.

Come with me to Wyoming, sir, and you will talk to officers that introduced themselves to me as Republican police officers. They did not need to identity their party but their point to this Republican Senator was that this is not a partisan issue. They could have used the help. This became a case that so consumed Laramie, WY, that their limited resources were simply exhausted by one case. They would love to have had the Federal Government show up to work but the Federal Government was statutorily prohibited from coming to help.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask the Senator one additional question, and we will hold our time with the agreement of the Senator to have the last 10 minutes. Does the Senator believe the Federal Government has less of an interest in combating hate violence against gays and lesbians than hate violence based on race?

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. It has the same interest in defending the American people regardless of their minority, their race, religion, their culture, their sexual orientation, their disability, their agenda.

It seems to me the government's business is not to pick between who among its citizens it will defend, but that under the banner of equal protection and due process we defend all citizens. As our founding documents make clear, we are created equally.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator makes a point on race, religion, on gender, sexual orientation, on disability. This legislation goes to the core of the bias and hatred and addresses that. It gives the Justice Department the tools to be able to prosecute those. I thank the Senator.

How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 11 minutes remaining and the other side has 2 minutes remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, last Friday, immediately after calling up S. 625, the hate crimes bill, the Democratic leadership filed for cloture, I believe within 15 minutes after they called it up.

No one is filibustering this bill. In fact, there have only been 20 amendments filed to be considered.

I expected this bill to be debated. We hoped the minority or anyone in the majority, who so chooses, who wants to try to modify this bill and make it better, would have the opportunity to do so. We all know, if cloture is invoked, for the most part, all we can do is make motions to strike. Almost everything will be held to be nongermane and therefore not debatable, unless we get a supermajority to overcome the point of order.

All we are asking is for our side to be given an opportunity to present amendments that may improve this bill.

It is astonishing to me that cloture would be filed on a bill of this magnitude, a bill that has been hotly contested for very legitimate reasons, basically for the purpose of foreclosing any amendments on one side, including my substitute amendment, which I think almost anyone would have to admit is a reasonable amendment. I don't know whether it would be accepted as a substitute or not, but it ought to at least be debated and voted up or down.

I filed an amendment yesterday that preserves the death penalty as an option in hate crime cases. It seems to me that is an option we would not want to deny law enforcement. One would think you would want to give them that additional prosecutorial tool in hate crime cases that result in death of the victim.

We can cite countless cases where, because of the threat of the death penalty, because it is a statutory option, people have pled guilty, accepted life imprisonment, and the matter was solved prior to trial, which preserves judicial resources.

We also know, that when the death penalty is an option, in many cases law enforcement officials can break down one of the conspirators to plead guilty and to become a witness, and an effective witness at that, against the other perpetrators of the heinous murders.

But, if this bill passes, it specifically excludes the death penalty. It specifically takes away those powers of the Federal Government as a tool to resolve some of these matters.

As everybody knows, I am not a big fan of the death penalty. I think it should be used very, very narrowly and only under the most stringent of circumstances. I think it is too widely used today. But it at least ought to be an option that a prosecutor can use to obtain confessions, cooperation from witnesses and, of course, use as a penalty for those who commit really heinous crimes that are proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

On Friday, immediately after calling up S. 625, the Democratic bill, the Democratic leadership immediately filed for cloture, as though anybody wants to filibuster this. I doubt seriously that all 20 amendments would be called up, but with a limited amount of amendments we could finish this bill by Thursday, 2 days from now.

It is an important bill. Everybody admits it. Why would you foreclose to me, the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, the right to debate an effective substitute that may improve this bill and at least have a vote so those who agree with me can have their vote.

I point out to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts that it was he and I who passed the Hate Crimes Statistics Act in the early 1990s. I was the Republican Senator who came forward and helped to get that done.

This bill has proved effective in showing there are hate crimes in our society. We know that if the two of us got together, along with the distinguished Senator from Oregon, we could probably resolve the conflicts so we would not have to wait another 5 or 6 years to have hate crimes legislation pass. But, no, there is no desire to try to resolve these matters. There is a desire to invoke cloture, cut off basically all effective debate and all amendments including the amendment of the ranking member, cut off the amendment with regard to imposing or at least requiring the death penalty, and any number of other relevant amendments. For what? Because they want this bill at all costs, when they know that the House leadership will not accept it without further amendment.

So it makes you wonder if this is not done primarily for political reasons instead of working together to try to come up with legislation that literally would work to resolve these problems.

I agree with the distinguished Senator from Oregon. There is no excuse for anybody to abuse, mutilate, kill, or otherwise commit violent conduct against anybody in our society, let alone gays and lesbians. I do not think that is justified, that anybody could get away with that. And we ought to do whatever we can to stop it.

The fact remains that State and local law enforcement are dealing with the problem. We have challenged the other sides to give us examples, if they know any, where local law enforcement, local prosecution has not done the job. I am sure they may be able to come up with a few isolated examples, but I have not heard any yet.

We have had only 1 day of debate on this very important subject yesterday, and it was only a matter of a couple of hours. This is a bill that seeks completely to overhaul and vastly expand the role of the Federal Government in law enforcement. The attempt to prematurely cut off debate on a bill of this magnitude makes a mockery of the role of the Senate as a deliberative body.

If the distinguished Senator from Oregon is correct, if cloture is not invoked today—and I do not believe it should be—that this bill will be brought down, that would be a travesty because we could pass this bill by Thursday. There is not a soul in this body who is filibustering this bill, as far as I know. It just makes a mockery of the Senate as a deliberative body. I think the rush to ward off amendments can only lead to the conclusion it was done for sole purpose of thwarting any meaningful debate and avoiding some tough amendments because there is a wide disparity of viewpoint here with regard to the death penalty. But even if you are against the death penalty, you ought to realize the efficacy of having it there as a threat to criminals against hate crimes—yes, against gays and lesbians, to select that category—they might have to suffer the ultimate penalty because of what they have done.

In most cases the death penalty will not be imposed, but it will be used to obtain confessions, pleas, and cooperation from witnesses.

Again, I want to talk about the television show Law and Order. Although it is a fictional show, it really does portray how law enforcement uses the death penalty to obtain cooperation and confessions, to get people to testify against others, including their coconspirators. If you really want to do something about hate crimes, let's do it the right way and do it by amendment, amending this bill so the House will have to consider it. They are not going to accept this bill in its current form and Senator KENNEDY knows that. I know that. The distinguished Senator from Oregon knows that.

I think Senator KENNEDY would agree with me that this bill deserves more than a single day of debate—or I should say 2 hours or so yesterday—before Senators are precluded from filing amendments.

I agree wholeheartedly that Senator KENNEDY's bill, S. 625, is an important piece of legislation and should be given consideration in the Senate.

In the past I, too, have introduced legislation addressing hate crimes and I intend to offer a viable substitute amendment.

As someone who has remained interested in this issue, as Senator KENNEDY is and I am, I believe at a minimum I should have the opportunity to offer amendments relative to the discussion of hate crimes and to this bill. This opportunity, of course, can only be ensured if today's cloture vote fails and the leadership then agrees to work this out. Let's get a time agreement. Let's have limited amendments, and I think we can get our side to agree to that.

I believe my amendments will in fact improve this bill as it reads currently. Moreover, I believe the majority of my colleagues not only want to consider my amendments but would also approve my amendments. Protecting the safety and rights of all Americans is the paramount concern to all Senators. To not have a vote on the death penalty? For the first time, remove that as a consideration in these tough cases? If you really want to do something about hate crimes you ought at least to have the death penalty on the books.

There are, however, many differing thoughts about how to best provide the protection. No one is threatening to filibuster this bill. Relying on unsubstantiated rumors of machinations to file numerous irrelevant amendments is insufficient justification to cut off debate. The fact is, only 20 amendments were filed yesterday.

My colleagues and I are trying to engage in a sincere debate on this issue that affects all Americans. It is curious to me why the Senate Democrats are trying to block a substantive debate on hate crimes. By preventing relevant amendments from being offered and considered, the Democrats are shutting the door on any Republican ideas or alternatives, however constructive they may be. At least we should be entitled to a vote on a limited number of amendments. We could agree to that. Every Senator has the right to consider, thoughtfully, legislation that will have a significant impact on the way serious crimes are prosecuted in this country. By filing for cloture prematurely, the leadership is denying all Senators the right to debate and have a vote on issues that are important to them and the constituents of their States. Simply stated, it is wrong to foreclose debate on this very important bill.

I ask the Democratic leadership to rethink their strategy and unreasonable position. I strongly urge Senators to oppose cloture on this bill. I agree with my colleague from Massachusetts, every hate crime is a tragic reflection on our society and we need to address the problem. But no one has made the case to me that the local authorities are not effectively prosecuting these cases. We have asked them to. I believe the proper role of the Federal Government is to assist, not supplant, local law enforcement authorities. That is the approach I have taken in my alternative, which will not even be able to be considered if cloture is invoked today.

Let me just take a moment to review some of these cases that we have been talking about. Take the Roxanne Ellis and Michelle Abdill case here. This is the one that the distinguished Senator from Oregon, if I remember correctly, was referring to. Roxanne Ellis and Michelle Abdill. The defendant was Robert Acremant, the jurisdiction was Oregon. Acremant, shot Ellis and Abdill, a homosexual couple, to death as they lay gagged in the back of his truck—truly a heinous, vicious, reprehensible act.

What happened to this defendant? Was he let go because the Federal law enforcement authorities and prosecutors did not have this hate crimes bill? Not at all. The local law enforcement brought him to trial and he received—guess what—the death penalty. That doesn't sound to me like he is getting away with a hate crime.

Let's go down through a few more. James Byrd—we have heard a lot of about James Byrd and we ought to hear a lot about it. It was a terrible, heinous act that was committed in Texas by three defendants, Lawrence Russell Brewer, John William King, Shawn Allen Berry.

They beat Mr. Byrd, an African-American, unconscious. They chained him to the back of a pickup truck and dragged him for miles down rural roads. That is what all three of these heinous criminals did. What happened to them? Let me tell you. Because the death penalty was available, Shawn Allen Berry pled guilty and became a witness against the other two, who both received the death penalty. That doesn't sound to me like the Federal Government was needed in that case.

The fact of the matter is, the State and local officials said: Enough is enough. We are not going to tolerate this kind of activity, this type of action. The death penalty, because it was available for these crimes—a defendant pled guilty and was sentenced to life in prison without parole. The other two defendants received the death penalty. All we ask is that we be permitted to offer my substitute amendment which preserves the death penalty. I can't imagine that amendment would fail on this bill and it would improve this bill by leaps and bounds.

Matthew Shepard, we have heard a lot of talk about Matthew Shepard and yes, State prosecutors and law enforcement, who believe, as we do, that hate crimes should be prosecuted. In the Shepard case, the two defendants were Aaron McKinney and Russell Henderson. They kidnapped Shepard, a homosexual college student, beat him so severely that his skull was fractured a half dozen times, tied him to a fence post and left him to die. The defendant Henderson drove the truck into which Shepard, a homosexual college student was lured, helped tie him to a fence—and at least stood by while Shepard was beaten senseless.

What happened? Henderson pled guilty in order to avoid the death penalty. He was sentenced to two consecutive life terms with no possibility of parole. Aaron McKinney was sentenced to two consecutive life terms. He avoided the death penalty by agreeing not to appeal the life sentences. Had the death penalty not been there, who knows what would have happened? I think they had the defendants dead to rights, but it certainly did help in both of these cases to have the death penalty available.

Another case involved the homosexual couple, Gary Matson and Winfield Mowder. The defendants, Benjamin Williams and James Williams, shot Mr. Matson and Mr. Mowder to death. The death penalty was available and the prosecution is ongoing in both cases.

In another Texas case, the defendant Mark Stroman was tried for shooting Vasudev Patel, an Indian man, after 9/11, because Stroman thought Patel looked middle eastern. The local officials prosecuted the case and he received the death penalty.

In the case of Sasezley Richardson, an African-American, Jason Powell and Alex Witmer fired 12 shots at him in an attempt to "earn" a spider web tattoo from the Aryan brotherhood. The defendant Witmer drove the truck from which Powell fired 12 shots at Richardson. Because the death penalty was available, Powell pled guilty and testified for the State in order to avoid the death penalty. He was sentenced to life in prison without parole. In the case of Alex Witmer, the death penalty was available, and he pled guilty and was sentenced to 85 years in prison. What if that death penalty had not been available? Who knows whether they could have convinced one defendant to testify against the other.

The next chart begins with the case of Amanda Milan, who was stabbed to death for being a transgender woman. The defendants in this case were Duayne McCuller and Eugene Celestine in New York.

In this case Eugene Celestine gave McCuller the knife with which to kill Milan. The prosecution is currently ongoing, and both are facing the possibility of life in prison.

In another case, the victim, Billy Jack Gaither was bludgeoned to death because he was homosexual. The two defendants, Mullins and Butler, attacked Gaither with an ax handle, slit his throat, threw him on the top of a pile of tires, and set him on fire.

Because the death penalty was available, Mullins pled guilty prior to trial and was sentenced to life in prison without parole. Butler was sentenced to life in prison without parole only because the victim's parents requested that the prosecution not seek the death penalty. But because it was available, they were able to bring these cases to conclusion and these two heinous criminals were sentenced to life because neither wanted to go through a trial where they knew they could get the death penalty. By obtaining pleas prior to trial, the prosecutors saved scarce taxpayer dollars.

In a Virginia case, Danny Lee Overstreet, was killed by the defendant, Ronald E. Gay when Gay went on a shooting rampage in a gay bar, killing Overstreet and wounding six others. Because the death penalty was available, he was sentenced to four life terms.

I have a lot of empathy for those on the other side of this issue at this time who want to pass legislation to address some of these hate crimes. They would like to give the Federal Government more authority. I am not against that. But I would like to have a bill that will pass both Houses. I would like to have a bill that will go to work tomorrow, or the next day, or 2 months from now, when it passes both Houses and is signed by the President, which will really do something about these crimes. I want a bill where there is a threat of the death penalty so we can get pleas and save the taxpayers' money.

Frankly, these cases are important cases. In almost every case that the proponents of this piece of legislation bring up—in almost every case—the State and local law enforcement—in fact, in every case, to my knowledge—they have done the job. My substitute amendment would give them the tools, the money, and so forth to do the job even better.

I would like the opportunity as ranking member of the Judiciary Committee to be able to offer some amendments that should have votes. If I lose, I lose. If I win, I win. But the fact of the matter is that we ought to at least have this opportunity to debate it.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield myself 4 minutes.

With regard to the procedure, there have been two occasions when the majority leader has requested that we have a debate on this legislation and have relevant amendments. That process and that procedure were objected to by the other side.

First of all, during the more than 30 years that the existing hate crimes statute has been on the books, the federal government has never tried a hate crime case in which it sought the death penalty. There is nothing in our bill that prohibits a State with the death penalty from seeking that punishment if the State decides to prosecute the hate crime. The fact remains that nothing in our bill would allow the federal government to take jurisdiction away from a State that wants to prosecute a hate crime and seek the death penalty.

It is interesting. During this debate, we know exactly what our situation is. If you talk about race, national origin, and religion, they are protected, if they fall within the six categories. But sexual orientation is not. Disability is not protected. Neither is gender. Even in the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, he excludes gender. The Republican leadership of the House of Representatives will not take protection of sexual orientation. Those are the facts. Sometime, some day, we have to deal with the realities.

This has been out there for 5 years. We have the support of 22 attorneys general. We have the support of the former Attorney General of the United States, Dick Thornburgh, who understands the importance of this legislation. There is a need out there. You are not going to get that kind of inclusion, those kinds of protections, in terms of gender, under the amendment of the Senator from Utah, and you will not get it under the Republican leadership.

Those are the facts. We have the list of the amendments. We have an anti-abortion amendment by the Senator from Pennsylvania here. Relevant amendments. The list goes on. The leader asked for the ability to do that. At some time we have to take action.

We know what this is really all about. We have had this for 5 years. We passed it 57 to 42 last year and were denied the opportunity to get this out of the conference because of the Republican leadership in the House.

The real question is, Are we going to take the action now? How long do people have to wait to get this protection? They have waited 5 years. We have a lot of pious statements here about the need for protection for American citizens on the basis of sexual orientation and disability and gender. Yet we refuse to address it or pass it.

That is the question and the issue. It is domestic terrorism. These are crimes based upon hate and prejudice that ruin not only the individual but the community and the Nation. That is what we are talking about. Trying to dismiss this as routine kinds of investigations isn't what this is about. The Senator from Utah understands that. That is the question—whether we are going to be prepared to take those steps to provide the limited but extremely important opportunity to make sure we are going to do something.

How about sending a message to those people out there in terms of the potential of hate-motivated crimes? We sent them a message when we passed the church burning legislation. We sent a powerful message, and that virtually stopped. How about doing the same thing with regard to hate crimes because of sexual orientation or gender or disability? What is the other side scared of?

They say we are going to federalize another thing. Well, they found 37 other provisions they are glad to federalize, but not this kind of protection.

As the Senator from Oregon said, this protection is rooted in animus, the basic hatred that motivates these kinds of crimes. The question is, Are we going to do something about it?

This is the time. Twice Republicans rejected the opportunity for debate on relevant amendments. We know what is happening. This is the vote. This is the time. We want to make it very clear, and I am hopeful that we get cloture. If we do not, I want to give the assurance to the Senator from Utah that we are going to be back again and again.

So have no fear about not addressing this issue because this is just the beginning, and we are going to continue the battle through this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have heard all this rhetoric before. We have been working on this for 5 years. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts knows that we put together some of the most important legislation in history—he and I. He knows darn well that this bill isn't going anywhere if it passes in its current form. He knows darn well that it sounds good to make all these political points, but I would like to pass something. I would like to do something. I would like to have something that works. I am willing to do it in a Federal way.

The Senator seems to be saying, take his viewpoint about this or take nothing, which is what we have done for the last 5 or 6 years. He knows darn well that I will work on the bill with him. We have discussed this in private.

I don't like what is going on in our society any better than he does, but I challenge him to show me where State and local law enforcement are not doing the job. Explain to me why he would not have the death penalty to help law enforcement and the prosecutors to obtain pleas, cooperation from witnesses, and to have witnesses testify against their coconspirators, which conserves judicial resources.

He says that if the States want to prosecute hate crimes, they can seek the death penalty. The fact is, we are taking these matters away from the States and saying the Federal Government ought to prosecute these crimes where there will be no death penalty. I feel embarrassed to have to talk about the death penalty because I am not real enthused about it. I don't want it applied, except in the most stringent of circumstances. There has to be absolute guilt, and the crime has to be so heinous as to justify it.

Look, I would be willing to put sexual orientation in my bill. I don't want every rape to be considered a Federal hate crime. I don't want every criminal sexual act to be considered a federal hate crime, leading to the possibility of being brought before the Federal courts. On the other hand, I am certainly willing to talk about compromises.

The charts we just went through show that the criminals are being prosecuted. The crimes against gays and lesbians are being prosecuted. State and local law enforcement are bringing the appropriate prosecutions. The distinguished Senator said "let's send a message through this legislation" if nothing more. I would like to do that. I would like to get a bill that we can pass. I would like to get a bill that the House will accept—instead of accusing the House of not having the same interests at heart than the Senator from Massachusetts.

No one is arguing that hate crimes are not a problem. We have never denied that hate crimes are occurring. Nobody can deny that. I want to get rid of them as much as anybody. No one feels more strongly on this issue than I do, whether they support S. 625 or not. No one—least of all me—is suggesting that hate crimes are not a problem, or that we as an institution should stand by and do nothing about hate crimes. That is why I intend to offer an amendment to S. 625 that provides an alternative approach to helping in the fight against hate crimes. I am willing to sit down with the Senator and see if we can work out something that will pass both bodies. The tremendous record of State and local prosecutions of hate crimes suggest to me, however, that States are doing a great job policing these types of cases.

In my view, a measured, appropriate, and constitutional Federal response should be directed at helping States that ask for our assistance. Nobody is arguing that existing Federal law is adequate. No one contends that we should rest on the existing Federal hate crimes statute. We can all agree that the Federal Government should do more than what 18 U.S.C. 245 currently provides.

That is why I will offer an amendment to S. 625 that provides for an alternative approach to help in the fight against hate crimes. The record is clear. I have always been open to fixing 18 U.S.C. section 245 through amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time controlled by the Senator from Utah has expired.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise today to oppose the amendment offered by my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, to amend the penalty section of this bill to include the possibility of a death sentence.

This amendment is a step in the wrong direction.

Let me be clear. Those who commit crimes, including acts of violence that are motivated by hate, should be punished and punished severely. Federal law enforcement has an important role to ensure that hate crimes are investigated and prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. And if death results from a hate crime, Senator KENNEDY's bill provides for the full weight of the law to be brought to bear on that individual. It does so by providing for a maximum sentence of life in prison without the possibility of parole.

At a time when Americans are increasingly recognizing that the current death penalty system is broken, this is not the time to expand the Federal death penalty.

We know that justice should be blind. But, unfortunately, in the Federal death penalty system, it appears that justice is not always blind. A report released by the Justice Department in September 2000 showed troubling racial and geographic disparities in the administration of the Federal death penalty. The color of a defendant's skin or the Federal district in which the prosecution takes place can affect whether a defendant lives or dies in the Federal system. Former Attorney General Janet Reno ordered a further analysis of why these disparities exist. And Attorney General Ashcroft has agreed to continue this study.

We have not yet seen the results of this study, nor have we had the opportunity to review and understand what the results might mean for the fairness and integrity of our Federal justice system. While this important study is underway, Congress should not create even more death-eligible crimes.

I also strongly disagree with Senator HATCH's claim that the availability of the death penalty ensures efficient and reliable prosecution and conviction of those who commit hate crimes.

We know that levying death has an immensely coercive effect on the accused. The accused who wants to live and does not have the resources to mount a "dream team" defense may feel little choice but to accept whatever deal for less than death that the prosecution offers. This can happen in situations where the accused is less culpable than other defendants, or worse yet, innocent of the charges altogether.

I am very troubled by the practice of some prosecutors who may use the prospect of the death penalty to coerce a defendant, including a defendant who may be innocent, to accept guilt and a plea bargain.

A case involving defense representation from my state illustrates how this coercive tactic undermines the integrity of the justice system. It involves Christopher Ochoa, who confessed to a rape and murder out of fear of facing the death penalty in Texas. Mr. Ochoa was released a little over a year ago after serving 12 years of a life term in Texas. Mr. Ochoa won his freedom as a result of the persistence, hard work, and skill of students and professors at the Innocence Project at the University of Wisconsin-Madison Law School.

According to the Wisconsin State Journal, police arrived to question Mr. Ochoa in November 1988. Mr. Ochoa, who was 22 years old at the time, was "harangued with grisly details of the crime, many of them false. A burly sergeant told him he would be 'fresh meat' in prison, pounded tables and demonstrated where the death needle would pierce his arm. Ochoa confessed." In a forum at the University of Wisconsin after he was released, he said, "I don't think people can say what they would have done until they're in that situation." He said, "Basically, I was terrified."

The Federal system is not immune from the use of this coercive tactic or the other flaws that result in the risk of executing the innocent in the state systems. According to the Federal Death Penalty Resource Counsel Project, since the death penalty was re-enacted in 1988, approximately 3 percent of persons the Justice Department has attempted to execute may have been factually or legally innocent.

In one case, David Ronald Chandler claimed his innocence throughout the trial and the appellate process. Chandler believes that the real triggerman made a deal with the government to testify against Chandler, and in return the government would not seek the Federal death penalty against the triggerman. But the triggerman later recanted his testimony. Luckily for Chandler, President Clinton commuted his death sentence to life. But how many other defendants who have claims of innocence will not be so lucky, or feel forced to accept a life sentence? I don't know the answer to that question. None of us do. And that is why a thorough, top-to-bottom review of the death penalty system at the State and Federal levels is needed.

Until such a comprehensive review has been undertaken, and the necessary work has been done to ensure fairness and justice, Congress should refrain from expanding the Federal death penalty. Congress can ensure that perpetrators of crime are effectively punished without resorting to capital punishment.

I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing Senator HATCH's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use leader time to make my remarks this morning.

I appreciate the debate we have had on this issue now for the last couple of days. I am struck by a couple of issues. First, I am struck by the number of hate crimes that occur every day. We are told there are over 20 hate crimes committed in the United States every day—every day. The Southern Poverty Law Center estimates the real number may be 50,000 a year. That comes out to five an hour.

In the time we have had the debate just this morning, according to those statistics, 15 to 20 hate crimes have been committed in this country—in just the time the Senate has been in session this morning.

If there is such a good job being done across this country as we deal with that volume, I would not be able to say that with any authority this morning, but the volume is there. That leads me to the second point.

The second point is that behind each one of those statistics is a human being, a face, a story, a tragedy. That is, in essence, what this debate is all about—to end the tragedy in this country.

As I consider the options we have available to us legislatively, I consider those options as they must have existed during the civil rights debates of the fifties and sixties, and I am sure when we considered the civil rights issues in the fifties and sixties there were all kinds of reasons it was not the time to deal with civil rights laws; it was not the time to come to closure on how to address the rampant racism that existed in the country at that time.

Finally, it took leadership, it took resolve, it took bipartisan consensus and, ultimately, it took a willingness to commit to a bill. We passed the civil rights acts of the fifties and sixties, and today we are the better for it.

Who today would say we are going to repeal those laws? They have been on the books, they have worked, and we take credit for the fact they have.

This is our moment when it comes to hate crimes. This is our time to tell the Matthew Shepards of the world that we are not going to tolerate that anymore; that we are better than that; we are bigger than that.

Just as we addressed racism in the past, we have to address the prejudice against sexual orientation today. This is our chance. This is our moment. This is our Civil Rights Act for the year 2002. We are not going to have many more. Let's seize this opportunity. Let's seize this moment. Let's send a clear message. Let's end those terrible statistics. We can do it when we vote on cloture in a matter of moments this morning.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I yield myself time under my leader time that has been reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The leader has that right.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I do not intend to get into the details now and a discussion on the substance of the bill except to say this: The greatest hate crime of all that we should be dealing with right now is the hate crime of terrorism against America and free and innocent peoples all over the world who have been attacked by terrorists—3,000 approximately killed on 1 day, September 11. There is where our focus should be.

I am disappointed at the timing of this legislation, to say the least. We should be focused on the war on terror. We should be taking up the Defense authorization bill. We should have already taken it up. Normally we deal with the Defense authorization bill in May; certainly the early part of June. Now it appears to me there will be no way to get to the Defense authorization bill before probably next Tuesday at the earliest, and maybe later. Until we do that, we cannot begin on the regular appropriations bills, the first of which should be the Defense appropriations bill. We need to make sure our men and women in uniform and our law enforcement officials all over this country and all over the world who are fighting against this hate crime, terrorism, have what they need in terms of pay, quality of life, weapons, and sophisticated equipment they need to do the job.

While, obviously, this issue can be scheduled at some point—and I assume it will be scheduled—it certainly is one in which there is not an emergency facing us right now. I wanted to raise that point.

We do not even have a budget resolution. We are 2 months behind getting a budget resolution this year. It is just being ignored: No budget resolution. No 2003 numbers to which we have agreed. No policies. No enforcement mechanisms. How are we going to do the appropriations bills? What possible restraint can be provided for the ranking members and the chairmen of the subcommittees on appropriations?

The law requires we do the budget resolution by April 15. We do not have it. We do not know when we are going to have it. Apparently, we are never going to have it.

The Defense authorization bill was reported out of the committee May 15. While there were votes against it, it was a bipartisan vote. What is the problem? There is obviously a weapons system that is causing some consternation. Sooner or later we are going to have to address that issue—sooner rather than later, I hope.

With regard to this particular issue, I know how tough it is being majority leader and dealing with protracted debate and amendments. We saw last week what happens when we have a prematurely filed cloture motion. Tactically, one may think: I have to do it because I have to bring this to a conclusion.

We saw last Thursday night what happens when cloture is invoked and we cut off debate and amendments. Unless it is very tightly germane, it is not in order. So at midnight last Thursday night, we were trying to figure out how do we conclude the supplemental appropriations bill, again, for defense and homeland security. Amendments were being knocked out right and left, probably amendments that were worthy and should have been taken but were not germane.

We are about to do that here. We made the mistake last week, and now we are about to make the mistake again this week. We are going to cut off amendments. As a matter of fact, a substitute amendment by the ranking member of the committee of jurisdiction, Senator HATCH, would be nongermane postcloture. It is not a question of trying to stop unrelated amendments. This is an amendment that even deals with the substance of the issue. Why are we doing that?

I used to file cloture motions perhaps prematurely, and I was royally pilloried by the other side of the aisle: Why did you file a cloture motion so prematurely? You shouldn't do that.

Most of the time I realized it was probably a mistake, and on occasion, I backed off and we vitiated the cloture vote.

Even at the beginning of the last Congress when it was 50–50, under S. Res. 8, the organizing resolution, we agreed specifically in the rule that cloture motions could not be filed before 12 hours of debate had taken place. When the majority changed, that rule went by the board, but the principle was there. Why was it good when we were 50–50 but not good when it is 50–49 and 1? This is not partisan. I have made this mistake. I think it is a mistake. We should not do this.

This cloture motion was filed after 12 minutes, not 12 hours. This bill was called up and within 12 minutes a cloture motion was filed. This is not the way to do business. We are prepared to debate this issue, consider legitimate, substantive amendments, and any other amendment for certainly a reasonable period of time. This is cutting off members of committees of jurisdiction. This is cutting off all Senators. It is a mistake. We made the mistake last week. We should not make the mistake now.

On my side of the aisle, it would be a message that we are not going to prematurely cut off debate. Give it a little time. It works on both sides of the aisle. I urge my colleagues to vote against this cloture motion. Let's have some amendments offered. Let's spend some time making sure we do not get ourselves trapped in the same situation we did last Thursday night, which was not pretty for this institution.

I yield the floor.

Mr. WELLSTONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts controls the time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the Senator from Minnesota 2 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I disagree with my colleague, the minority leader. It is always an emergency when brutal crimes are committed against people because of their sexual orientation or gender or because of disability.

I think it is an emergency for our country when someone such as Matthew Shepard is brutally murdered. I think it is an emergency for our country when what we say to people is not just that they are a victim or that we dehumanize people but, rather, we say to many citizens in our country, by gender or sexual orientation, because they are a gay or because they are a lesbian, they are next. Hate crimes violate not only our Constitution but they destroy our oneness as a people. They diminish us as a country. They take away from what is best in our Nation.

I insist, as a Senator from Minnesota, that this is an emergency and that we should pass this legislation and that this legislation must not be blocked. If it were your loved one who had been murdered, if it were your loved one who were a target of these hate crimes, you would consider it an emergency and you would want us to pass this very important legislation.

I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001, and my disappointment that the Senate failed to invoke cloture on this important legislation today. As a cosponsor of Senator KENNEDY's bill, I believe it is crucial that we pass hate crimes legislation in an expeditious manner in order to provide the government with the tools it needs to prosecute the many senseless bias-motivated crimes that occur in our country each year. In the past several decades we have made significant progress in reducing discrimination, yet more needs to be done. This legislation is an important step toward ending the scourge of hate crimes that continues to plague our Nation.

Data gathered under the Federal Hate Crime Statistics Act about the prevalence of these crimes is sobering. Beginning in 1991, the Act requires the Justice Department to collect information from law enforcement agencies across the country on crimes motivated by a victim's race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnicity. Congress expanded the Act in 1994 to also require the collection of data for crimes based upon the victim's disability. For the year 2000, 11,690 law enforcement agencies in 48 states and the District of Columbia reported 8,063 bias-motivated criminal incidents (8,055 single-bias and 8 multiple-bias incidents) to the FBI. The incidents consisted of 9,430 separate offenses, 9,924 victims, and 7,530 distinguishable offenders. According to the data collected, 53.8 percent of the 8,055 single-bias incidents were motivated by racial bias, 18.3 percent by religious bias, 16.1 percent by sexual-orientation bias, 11.3 percent by ethnicity/national origin bias, and 0.5 percent by disability and multiple biases.

The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is carefully tailored to ensure a state's ability to prosecute hate crimes, but it provides the Federal government with additional tools to prosecute hate crimes should a state be unable to do so. The legislation extends the Federal law to prohibit hate crimes against victims because of their gender, sexual orientation or disability. In addition, the legislation allows Federal prosecution of hate crimes wherever they occur and under whatever circumstances, thus broadening the previous requirement that the hate crime occur while the victim is engaged in a "federally protected activity."

The need for these limited changes in existing Federal hate crimes laws is clear. For example, according to the Justice Department, 16.1 percent of the hate crimes committed in 2000 were motivated by the victim's sexual orientation. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act would expand the definition of hate crimes to include those committed because of the victim's sexual orientation—in addition to a victim's gender or disability.

A hate crime may meet the federal definition of "hate crime" yet the federal government is still powerless to aid in its prosecution. For example, in the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11th, our Nation has struggled to prevent discrimination and acts of violence against Arab-Americans. Despite the resolve that most Americans have shown in that regard, tragically, crimes have occurred. On September 15, 2001, Balbir Singh Sodhi, a Sikh-American, was shot and killed at his gas station in Mesa, Arizona. This tragic incident was the most serious of several attacks against people of Middle Eastern and South Asian descent who were targeted in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks. Although religion and national identity are already protected under current law, the hate crimes legislation before us would give the Federal government enhanced authority to investigate and prosecute these types of crimes.

Despite the progress towards ending discrimination over the past decades, it is undeniably clear that raw hatred and its tragic consequences continue to exist in our Nation. Strengthening the Federal government's ability to prosecute hate crimes is an important step towards the eradication of hate crimes in our country. Mr. President, I urge my Senate colleagues to bring the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act back to the floor of the Senate and to join me in supporting this important hate crimes legislation. We have an invaluable opportunity to make a statement that the United States government will not tolerate crimes motivated by bigotry and prejudice, and I look forward to the day when there is no longer a need in our Nation to legislate such changes.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to express my strong support of the Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001, the "Hate Crimes Act." The Hate Crimes Act is a bill whose time has come. I would like to commend Senator KENNEDY for his long, hard work to pass this important legislation, and I am happy to have the opportunity to vote for it today.

The Hate Crimes Act creates an intergovernmental assistance program which would provide technical, forensic, prosecutorial and other forms of assistance to state and local law enforcement officials for hate crimes based on race, color, religion, national origin, gender, sexual orientation and disability. The bill authorizes the Justice Department to award grants of up to $100,000 to state, local, and Indian law enforcement officials who have incurred extraordinary expenses associated with investigating and prosecuting hate crimes. This legislation requires grant applicants to coordinate with affected community groups, schools, and colleges and universities. In addition, this bill gives the Justice Department jurisdiction over crimes of violence involving bodily injury, if motivated by a person's actual or perceived race, color, religion, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, or disability, if it meets both the interstate commerce and certification requirements in the underlying statute.

Lastly, the bill amends the Hate Crimes Statistics Act to include gender and requires the FBI to collect data from states on gender-based hate crimes in the same manner that it currently collects data for race, religion, sexual orientation, disability, and ethnicity.

The number of reported hate crimes has grown by almost 90 percent over the past decade and we cannot afford to ignore this growing problem. The recent hate-motivated crimes in my state of Washington demonstrate the destructive and devastating impact hate crimes have on individual victims and entire communities. On May 9th, 2002, Patrick Cunningham pled guilty to the September 13, 2001 attack of an Islamic Idriss Mosque in Seattle. Mr. Cunningham doused two cars with gasoline in the mosque parking lot in an attempt to destroy the mosque and harm worshipers inside. Cunningham also shot at the worshipers after being discovered. Just a few days later, on September 18, 2001, Kulwinder Singh, a Sikh cabdriver in Seatac, Washington, was harassed and physically assaulted by a passenger.

This legislation takes important steps to ensure that crimes motivated by the victim's race, gender, sexual orientation, disability or religion can be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, and it removes the artificial limitations that currently keep local law enforcement from getting needed assistance. The Hate Crimes Act provides the necessary complement between state and federal law enforcement officials in order to ensure that perpetrators of hate crimes are brought swiftly to justice. The federal government's resources, forensic expertise, and experience in the identification and proof of hate-based motivations have often provided invaluable addition to the important work conducted by local investigators. One need only remember the brutal killing of James Byrd in Jasper County, Texas to understand the benefits of an effective hate crimes investigative partnership between state and federal authorities. This partnership is also crucial to the work of the National Church Arson Task Force and to the increase in the number of hate crimes solved by arrests and prosecutions.

I believe that the Hate Crimes Act is necessary to ensure that violent hate crimes based on sexual orientation, gender, or disability do not go unpunished. Every year, a significant number of hate crimes are perpetrated across our nation based on anti-gay bias. Current law, however, leaves the federal government without the authority to work in partnership with local law enforcement officials or to bring federal prosecutions when gay men or lesbians are the victims of murder or other violent assaults because of bias based on their sexual orientation.

This Act would fix the inadequacies in pre-existing federal law, which became painfully apparent in the vicious murder of Matthew Shepard in Laramie, Wyoming, and the subsequent investigation and prosecution of his assailants. The lack of federal funding caused significant financial hardships on the local sheriff's department in its efforts to bring Matthew's killers to justice, and, as a result, five law enforcement staff members were laid off. In response, this bill amends the criminal code to cover hate crimes based on sexual orientation and authorizes grants for state and local programs designed to combat and prevent hate crimes.

This legislation would have a measurable impact in my state of Washington and help prosecute the growing string of hate-based attacks targeting individuals' sexual orientation. On April 6, 1995 in Olympia, Washington, four young adults brutally assaulted Bill Clayton, an openly bisexual high school student, and his friends who happened to be walking with him. Just two months after the assault, the seventeen-year-old committed suicide. Prior to his suicide he had explained to his mother that he was just tired of coping, and that it was the constant knowledge that any time he could be attacked because he was bisexual, that despite the love of his family and friends, all he could see ahead of him was a lifetime of facing a world filled with hate and violence, going from one assault to another. We cannot let our citizens live in fear for their safety, knowing that their attackers will not be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. This legislation is necessary to fill the current void to ensure vigorous prosecution of individuals who perpetrate a hate crime. The extra federal resources that this Act would make available in the investigations and prosecutions of hate-motivated crimes would serve as both a significant deterrent and punishment, and would likely bring a greater number of cases to successful resolution through arrest and prosecution. We must do all we can to prevent the incidents that led to Bill Clayton's tragic death.

I believe it is important that we recognize from the beginning that not all crimes are hate crimes. The reason behind this is simple. All crimes are not created equal and mental states, in addition to acts, have always played an important role in determining the severity and subsequent punishment of a crime. Recognizing this, it is well established that a legislature can properly determine that crimes committed against certain classes of individuals are different or warrant a stiffer response. Moreover, the U.S. Supreme Court had unanimously ruled that bias-inspired conduct inflicts greater individual and societal harm.

I share Senator KENNEDY's concerns regarding hate crimes, and I have consistently supported hate crimes legislation, from the time I was in the Washington state House of Representatives to now. There are nearly 8,000 hate crime incidents reported annually each year. The Hate Crimes Act sends a clear message that violence against a person based on skin color, sexual orientation, or religion will not be tolerated anywhere in this country. The bill will provide broader federal jurisdiction to prosecute hate crimes, including crimes motivated by race, color, religion, gender, sexual orientation, and disability. Broadening federal jurisdiction will allow effective prosecution even when hate crimes are committed in states that lack hate crime statutes, or where local law enforcement lacks the resources for this type of prosecution. Additionally, the bill will provide federal grant money to states to better enable these jurisdictions to successfully prosecute hate crime offenders. We cannot afford to wait any longer to pass this vital legislation. Our sons and daughters, brothers and sister, mothers and fathers depend upon this Act to ensure full protection of their right to be free from hate-motivated crimes. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in expressing my strong support for The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001, legislation of which I am an original cosponsor.

Popularly known as The Hate Crimes Prevention Act, this legislation would: expand current federal protections against hate crimes based on race, religion, and national origin; amend the criminal code to cover hate crimes based on gender, sexual orientation, and disability; authorize grants for State and local programs designed to combat and prevent hate crimes; and enable the federal government to assist State and local law enforcement in investigating and prosecuting hate crimes.

While past efforts to enact this legislation have received strong bipartisan support, we have not been able to get it to the President's desk for his consideration. We must now work to ensure that this legislation is not simply supported, but actually passed and signed into law by the President.

In the aftermath of the tragic events of September 11th, we saw a terrible rise in hate crimes in the United States. California was not immune to the violence.

In San Gabriel, CA, Adel Karas, an Egyptian-American grocer, was shot to death while he worked in his store. It is believed that he was a victim of an attack motivated by the September 11 attacks, not a robbery, because all the cash was left in his register.

In Palmdale, CA, a public high school found a notice threatening a "massacre" to avenge the terrorist attacks, complete with the names of five Muslim students who would be targeted.

In Lancaster, CA, Gerald Pimentel, a Hispanic man, was attacked after he was mistaken for being Iranian. Two men bumped his car three times while he was driving. His car was then blocked, and the men began yelling and running toward him. They chased him through his yard and into his home. When he tried to defend his family, they beat him. "They'd been calling him an Iranian," Gerald's daughter later said. "I couldn't understand why. You know, my dad is not Iranian. They just kept hitting and hitting my dad," she said.

The FBI has investigated over 300 incidents since September 11 in which individuals perceived to be Muslim or of Middle Eastern decent have been attacked or threatened because of their religion or national origin.

President Bush moved swiftly to protect Muslims and Arab-Americans from hate crimes and sent out a message that this nation will not tolerate such attacks against any Americans.

The President implored, "In our anger and emotion, our fellow Americans must treat each other with respect. . . . Those who feel like they can intimidate our fellow citizens to take out their anger don't represent the best of America, they represent the worst of humankind. . . ."

Attorney General John Ashcroft reiterated the President's message by warning that, "We must not descend to the level of those who perpetrated [September 11th] violence by targeting individuals based on race, religion or national origin."

Now, it is the Senate's turn to speak out. We can, and must, do more to prevent these types of hateful threats and acts of violence, and passing The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act would do just that.

I have seen, first-hand, the devastating impact hate crimes have on victims, their families and their communities. A hate crime divides neighborhoods and breeds a sense of mistrust and fear within a community.

I am an original cosponsor of The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act because it is aimed at protecting citizens from crimes based on their real or perceived race, ethnicity, religion, gender, disability, or sexual orientation.

The current hate crimes law simply does not go far enough. It covers only crimes motivated by bias on the basis of race, color, religion or national origin, and it only covers instances in which the victim was targeted because he or she was engaged in a federally-protected activity, such as voting, attending a public school, or if the crime occurred on federal property.

The limitations of current Federal law prevent it from reaching many hate crimes where individuals are killed or injured by just walking down the street or, in the case of Clint Risetter, where he was sleeping in his own home.

On February 24, 2002, Clint Risetter awoke in his Santa Barbara apartment engulfed in flames and then tried to escape as he was burning. When firefighters arrived, they found him dead on his patio. Two days later, Martin Hartmann walked into the Santa Barbara Police Department and admitted to entering Clint's apartment, pouring gasoline on him as he slept, and then setting him on fire.

Hartmann had known Clint for several months but had learned just recently that Clint was gay. He told police about his hatred toward gays and how he ". . . decided to put [Clint] out of his misery," because he was gay. He believed that he was doing the right thing and that Clint deserved to die.

Clint's murder is being prosecuted as a hate crime because it took place in California which has its own hate crimes law that includes sexual orientation. However, had it taken place in one of the 27 states that do not have hate crimes laws that include sexual orientation, Clint's family might not receive the justice they are entitled to.

Gay men and lesbians are the third-largest hate-crime victim group in the country, the second-largest in California. They were the targets of more than 16 percent, or almost 1,300, of all hate crimes in 2000. Yet, current Federal hate crimes law does not include crimes against individuals because of their real or perceived sexual orientation.

Current law does not extend basic civil rights protections to every American, only to a few and under certain circumstances.

The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act would expand current Federal protections against hate crimes based on race, color, religion, and national origin, and amend the criminal code to cover hate crimes based on gender, disability, and sexual orientation.

Extending the law would not provide special rights, it would ensure equal protection.

In the past, we have made some progress in the sentencing and prosecution of hate crimes, but more needs to be done. I am proud to have sponsored The Hate Crimes Sentencing Enhancement Act which was signed into law in 1994, and has just recently been invoked for the first time.

In 1996, Julianne Marie Williams and Laura Winans were discovered dead in Virginia's Shenandoah National Park, bound and gagged with their throats slit.

In April of this year, Attorney General John Ashcroft announced that The Hate Crimes Sentencing Enhancement Act would be invoked in the murder indictment against the perpetrator of this horrific crime, Darrell Rice, "to ensure justice for victims of hate crimes."

Rice chose his victims based on their gender and sexual orientation. He even stated that he intentionally selected women to intimidate and assault "because they are more vulnerable than men" and that these two women "deserved to die because they were lesbian whores."

With this indictment, the Federal Government has recognized the horrendous nature of this hate crime and that it should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

However, prosecutors were only able to use The Hate Crimes Sentencing Enhancement Act because the two women were killed in a national park. If these murders had occurred in almost any other place in America, The Hate Crimes Sentencing Enhancement Act could not have been invoked and, again, justice might not have been ensured for the victims and their families.

Enacting The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act would ensure that all hate crimes can be investigated and prosecuted no matter what the victims are doing when they are targeted and no matter where the crime is perpetrated.

It would also significantly increase the ability of State and Federal law enforcement agencies to work together to solve and prevent hate crime.

Until we enact this legislation, many hate crime victims and their families may not receive the justice they deserve.

Those who are opposed to this legislation would say that we should leave it up to the states to legislate, enforce and prosecute hate crimes laws.

To those, I would refer you to a May 3rd, 2002, New York Times editorial which put it best. It read:

> Congress has long recognized that the Federal Government should play a role in pursuing certain crimes, like bank robbery, kidnapping and racketeering, where the national interest is great and where federal law enforcement is in a good position to offer help to local police and prosecutors. Crimes in which individuals are singled out because of their race, religion or membership in other protected groups strike directly at this nation's commitment to equality, and are worthy of this sort of special federal involvement.

Other opponents of this legislation often argue that any crime of violence is a hate crime and that the motives behind and harms caused by a hate crime are not relevant or distinguishable from other crimes. I disagree.

The crimes perpetrated against Gerald Pimentel, Julianne Williams and Laura Winans, and Clint Risetter were carried out with a different intent and motive than other violent crimes.

Unfortunately, they are characteristic of many hate crimes in America; where an attacker repeatedly beats, stabs or severely burns his victim as if he is removing whatever it is he hates out of the person.

And the attacker feels justified in doing so, as if he is doing a great service to humanity by killing the person.

Congress should expand the ability of the Federal Government to investigate these heinous crimes, and it should expand the ability to prosecute anyone who would target victims because of hate.

Final passage of the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is long overdue. It is necessary for the safety and well being of millions of Americans.

No American should be afraid to go to work or school because of his or her religion or national origin.

No American should be afraid to go hiking for fear of a gender-motivated attack.

And certainly, no American should be afraid to sleep in their own home because of his or her sexual orientation.

We have had strong bipartisan support for this legislation in the past, and it continues to receive bipartisan support. It now has 50 cosponsors in the Senate and 206 cosponsors in the House.

Today, I urge my colleagues to invoke cloture and vote in favor of this legislation. Let us now send a message to all Americans, that we will no longer turn a blind eye to hate crimes in this country.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I speak today because it is time for Congress to send its own message to those who would perpetrate hate crimes. That message should be that Federal law will no longer tolerate intolerance. Hate crimes are a stain on our national greatness, and it is time to stop that stain from spreading.

Fighting hate crimes should not be a partisan issue. This is not about giving preferences to one group of people or another. I am talking about opposing violence. I am talking about opposing brutal crimes.

When the fight for a hate crimes law first began in the early 1990s, many Americans questioned whether the problem was serious enough to warrant a specific law. But during the past decade, from one coast of the United States to the other, tragic events have proven that a law is badly needed.

These crimes are so unspeakably ugly that the names of the victims are seared in our minds. James Byrd, Jr., dragged to his death because he was black. Matthew Shepard, beaten and left for dead because he was gay.

My home State has been wounded by hate crimes, too. Oregonians will not forget Roxanne Ellis and her partner, Michelle Abdill, who were taped up and shot twice in the head in the back of their own pickup truck in Medford, Oregon in December 1995. Or Loni Okaruru, who was found last August bludgeoned to death in a field in Washington County, just outside Portland. Loni was a transsexual planning to undergo surgery. She had been beaten multiple times prior to that night.

The Senate has passed hate crimes legislation unanimously several times, only to see it jettisoned in Conference with the other body. The consequences of all this legislative wrangling are real. Each time Congress delays, more brutal, hate-driven deaths go unpunished. Each time Congress delays, more hate crimes happen, because the perpetrators have no fear of being punished for the true nature of their acts.

The legislation before this body today will close the loopholes in Federal hate crimes law. It will give local law enforcement the full force of Federal resources in investigating and prosecuting crimes motivated by bias against sexual orientation, gender or disability.

This legislation will not preempt State and local laws or authorities. But it will provide Federal backup to important local efforts. Based on testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, it is likely that Federal help will be sought by local authorities in a dozen cases a year.

The message Congress sends in passing this bill is as important as the resources that will be made available to local law enforcement. It is time to limit the lengths to which people can go to infect our society with diseases like racism, and homophobia, and religious intolerance.

Hate crimes are intentionally directed at victims because of who they are. They strike not just at a person but at the heart of a community, be it a black community, a gay community, or a disabled community. And when any one group is targeted, the entire American community feels the blow.

The scourge of hate crimes must be confronted and eradicated. This legislation gives Congress the means to do so. I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture on the bill so that it can be enacted swiftly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I understand we have 3½ minutes remaining. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Oregon, and I will take the last minute and a half.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. As I contemplate the conclusion of this debate, my own judgment is that it has been one of the poorer debates I have witnessed in the Senate. Until this moment, there has been very little participation in it. Frankly, I find that disappointing because, as the Senator from Minnesota pointed out, this is an emergency.

I have to think of all of our gay brothers and sisters who may be watching, who cannot follow the confusion of Senate procedure, who will be very disappointed that once again we are thwarted from proceeding on a matter that is, in fact, very important. This is about domestic terrorism and about the Federal Government showing up to work.

On a positive note, I say, as Senator KENNEDY has said, we will be back and we will find another vehicle and another opportunity to proceed. I hope in the meantime we will reach out to Senator HATCH and others who have legitimate concerns to find ways to incorporate their concerns in an even better bill, and I hope we will do that in the spirit of the great example set in the New Testament. When confronted with a woman who had committed adultery, Christ himself was able to say in the public square he did not condemn, he did not endorse the lifestyle, but he did save a life. I think we ought to do the same as the Federal Government. It is in that spirit I intend to vote to invoke cloture.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the most fundamental right we have as citizens is to be able to live in a peaceful country without the fear of violence in our society. We have seen so many different instances where violence has come in our society based on race, religion, and national origin. We have, over a period of years, tried to free ourselves from that form of discrimination. That is what this is about: Making sure that every American, regardless of their race, religion, national origin, sexual orientation, disability, or gender, is going to have the full support and weight of the Justice Department to ensure they will be able to live in this country in peace and dignity and some security. That should be a responsibility of the Justice Department, and it should be a common responsibility for all Americans.

That is not the state of affairs today, but this legislation will guarantee that. That is why it is so important. We are not prepared to exclude any different group. We want to include all Americans. That is why this legislation includes all of those groups. It is broadly supported by the law enforcement community, 22 attorneys general, former attorneys general from the United States, Republicans, and by virtually all the diverse religious leaders. They understand the moral issues, the moral compulsion, as well as the issues of liberty that are included. I hope we would now invoke cloture.

So all Members know, obviously if the amendments are germane, they will be considered after cloture. But let us give this message to all Americans that they will live in a secure nation.

NOT VOTING—3

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 54, the nays are 43. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn, not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which cloture was not invoked on S. 625, the hate crimes legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is entered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to express my severe disappointment in the Senate's failure to invoke cloture on the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act—also known as the Hate Crimes bill. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this bill, but I am not proud of what the Senate did to that bill today.

One of the things we try to do in this Chamber, as lawmakers, is to adopt laws that express and encode our values as a society—to, in some sense, put into law our aspirations for the kind of people we want to be. Clearly, one of the bedrock values, one of the fundamental values, of America is equality—equality of treatment before the law, equality of opportunity but, beyond that, a broader notion of tolerance in our society. It is part of what brought generations of immigrants to this country—the idea that they would be judged on their personal merit, not on anything related to their personal status or characteristics.

Starting with our Declaration of Independence—our Nation's documentary explication of the values underpinning our experiment in self-government—our country's leaders have laid out a vision of a nation born and bred in notions of tolerance and equality. We know for a certainty that our nation did not live up to that vision when it was first articulated, but in each successive generation we have tried hard to meet the ideals we set out for ourselves. And in each successive generation we have come a bit closer to meeting that goal. Sometimes, obviously, we do not achieve those aspirations and we are intolerant toward one another. Then the law has not only the opportunity but the obligation to step in and to try to create incentives or deterrents toward the worst forms of intolerance, even hatred. That is what this bill is about.

Clearly, over the decades our Nation has built a strong and proud history of protecting the civil rights of Americans who are subject to racial, religious, gender-based, or disability-based discrimination in the workplace, in housing, in life. In more recent times, many of us here in the Chamber have worked to try to extend some of those protections to cover discrimination based on sexual orientation.

This bill stands solidly in that tradition and is just one more step on our nation's path to make its vision of itself a reality. Like the civil rights laws of which we are all so proud, this bill proclaims that there is certain conduct that is unacceptable to us as a nation. This bill takes Federal criminal jurisdiction and extends it to the prosecution and punishment of those who are accused of having caused bodily injury or death based on an animus, a hatred that comes from feelings about the victim's race, religion, nationality, gender, disability, or sexual orientation. In other words, this is another way for our society to express our disdain, to put it mildly, at acts of violence committed based on a person's race, religion, nationality, gender, disability, or sexual orientation.

It is also a way, as is traditionally the province of criminal law, not just to speak to the common moral consensus of our society about what is right and what is wrong—that, after all, is what the law is all about—but also by punishing those who are proven to have committed the wrongs and to deter others in the future from committing those same acts that society generally finds abhorrent.

Current law expresses this but in a way that is limited. It permits Federal prosecutions of hate crimes resulting from death or bodily injury if two conditions are met: First, the crime must be motivated by the victim's race, religion, national origin, or color. Second, the perpetrator must have intended to prevent the victim from exercising certain specific federally protected rights. Of course, I support this law and the goals that it embraces: The Federal prosecution of people who inflict serious harm on others because of the color of the victim's skin, the sound of the victim's voice, a foreign accent, or the particular place in which the victim worships God. In short, these are crimes committed because the victim is different in some way from the perpetrator. Such crimes, I conclude, should be eligible for federal prosecution.

But the current federal law is too limited to address many of the hate crimes that are deserving of federal prosecution, and we need for the law to more fully express some of the principles I talked about at the outset: equality, tolerance, doing everything we can to stop the most abhorrent acts of violence against people based on their characteristics. I think we ought to add to the list of prohibited bases of these crimes, crimes committed against someone because of gender, because of sexual orientation, and because of disability. Adding these categories—gender, sexual orientation, disability—seems to me to be an appropriate extension of the basic concept of equal protection under the law. As the law now stands, it also imposes a requirement, a bar to prosecution relating to race, color, religion, and national origin that we ought to change, which is that the law is only triggered if the victim is prevented from exercising a specific type of federally protected activity.

There are obviously crimes that are committed based on hatred that are triggered in cases other than the prevention of the exercise of a specific federally protected activity, thus, the provision of this bill that would eliminate this obstacle and, therefore, broaden the ability of Federal prosecutors to pursue crimes motivated by racial or religious hatred. It would still, however, require prosecutors to show a connection to interstate commerce.

Just as importantly for those concerned that this bill unnecessarily intrudes upon State prerogatives, the bill also includes language requiring the Justice Department, prior to indicting a defendant for a hate crime, to certify not just that there is reasonable cause to believe that the crime was motivated by improper bias, but also that the U.S. Attorney has consulted with local law enforcement officials and determined one of four things—that the state doesn't have or won't exercise jurisdiction to prosecute the crime, that the State has asked for federal prosecution, that the State does not object to federal prosecution or that the State has completed its prosecution and the Justice Department wants to initiate a subsequent prosecution. This process ensures both that we will avoid an unnecessary overlap between the exercise of State and federal jurisdiction and that those in local law enforcement, closest to the alleged crime, will have the first opportunity to pursue those committing these heinous crimes.

At the same time, it makes clear that in cases where federal prosecutors determine that federal prosecution is essential to vindicate federal values, this statute will be available to them. This certification process should lay to rest the concerns some of my colleagues have who fear that Federal prosecutors will interfere with State efforts to bring perpetrators of hate crimes to justice.

At a time when so much else is going on here in the Capitol with the high profile issues of this session, this bill brings us back to America's first principles of equality and tolerance and challenges each of us to think about the appropriate and constructive role that the law can play, understanding that the law can't control the hearts of people in this country.

Ultimately, we have to count on people's own sense of judgment and tolerance and, hopefully, the effect that other forces in their lives will have on them to make them fair and tolerant, such as their families, their schools, their religions, their faith. But this bill is here to say in the cases when all of those other sources of good judgment and values in society fail to stifle the hatred that sometimes does live in people's hearts and souls, to say that this is unacceptable in America and to attach to that statement the sanction of law, hoping that we thereby express the higher aspirations we have for this great country of ours as it continues over the generations to try to realize the noble ideals expressed by our founders in the Declaration of Independence, but also to put clearly into the force of law the punishment that comes with law when one goes so far over the line to commit an act of violence based on hatred, hoping thereby that we will deter such heinous acts from occurring again in the future.

The Senate had a chance today to bring us one step closer to making the law more closely reflect our founding vision. The Senate should have taken that step. It is a truly deep disappointment that it did not do so. This will not, though, be our last chance. The bill's opponents will not be able to hide behind procedural posturing forever. This bill will come back again this year to the Senate and when it does, I believe that we have no choice but to pass it. Our values as a nation will allow for no less.

I thank the distinguished Chair. I yield the floor.

NOT VOTING—3

The bill (S. 2578) was passed, as follows:

S. 2578

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INCREASE IN PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT.

Subsection (b) of section 3101 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking "$5,950,000,000,000" and inserting "$6,400,000,000,000".

Mr. REID. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I rise today to offer my support for increasing the federal debt ceiling by $450 million. This is a difficult issue and I well understand that we need to raise the debt ceiling. We have troops conducting military operations overseas. We are working here at home to address critical national security needs. But if we hadn't acted today, the United States would have been on the verge of defaulting on its debt for the first time in history. This is unacceptable.

However, now that we have voted to raise our debt limit, we must begin an honest and open debate about why we are having this vote. I want to make it crystal clear that I believe we need to extend the budget enforcement procedures and establish reasonable discretionary spending caps as soon as possible.

At the beginning of last year, the Congressional Budget Office projected a ten-year surplus of $5.6 trillion and the debt ceiling seemed to be high enough to last through fiscal year 2008. That all changed, however, as the projected big surpluses first started to decline last year and then dramatically changed into a $2.7 trillion deficit. We know that the current deficit is the result of last year's tax cut, the recession, and the tragic events of September 11, 2001.

One of the most important actions we can take for the nation's future economic stability is to pay down the national debt. According to Chairman of the Federal Research Board, Alan Greenspan, paying down the national debt lowers interest rates and keeps the capital markets and investment going. In January, he told the Senate Budget Committee that one of the reasons long-term rates have not come down is the sharp decrease in the surplus and the diminishing prospects for paying down the debt.

I want to make it clear that the change in our fiscal situation has driven estimated federal interest costs higher: CBO has boosted its projection of federal interest costs in 2002 through 2011 from just over $600 billion a year ago to $1.6 trillion. The dramatic downturn in the federal budget will force taxpayers to pay $1.2 trillion more in debt payments, money that could have been used to invest in additional defense, homeland security, education, and job training.

Our total budget must be crafted within the need to maintain fiscal discipline, and stimulate economic growth through continued federal investment in education and job training, while also protecting the environment. Furthermore, we need to invest in our nation's economic future by making a commitment to public research and development in science and technology—maintaining our status as a global leader.

It is a balance. We must make these investments to secure our country. But we must do so within a framework that ensures we don't spend beyond our means. If we want our economy to be strong, if we want revenues, and if we want to make the right decisions, we need to keep paying down the debt.

Having spent time in the private sector, I can tell you this: No private sector organization thinks it can spend its way out of programs; nor can we as a country. This is why I supported and cosponsored the Gregg-Feingold Budget Enforcement Amendment last week—and why I will continue to work with my colleagues on extending the pay-as-you-go budget enforcement procedures as well as setting up reasonable discretionary spending limits.

Some voted against this debt limit increase today because it had not been paired with procedures for a fiscally disciplined framework. I certainly empathize with that position. We are in tough times. And tough times force us to make tough decisions. Today's vote was one of them.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I voted against S. 2578, a bill that would increase the public debt limit by $450 billion.

I support taking action to increase the debt limit, in order to protect the full faith and credit of the U.S. government. Frankly, we have no choice but to raise the limit. The United States must pay its bills. What I cannot support, however, is increasing the limit without also putting in place procedures for arresting this dramatic downturn in our nation's fiscal health.

I want to provide a little background on how we arrive at this juncture. You might remember that a little over a year ago, when the Bush administration submitted its first budget, we were told that, even with the enactment of the President's proposed tax cut, we would not hit the Federal debt limit until 2008. By August, with the tax cut enacted, the administration acknowledged it was wrong and that we would actually hit the debt limit in 2004. By December, that estimate was moved up again, with the Treasury Secretary admitting the debt limit would be reached within months and pleading with Congress to raise the limit so that the United States wouldn't default on its financial obligations.

And, I should not, the administration didn't just request a small debt limit increase. It requested a $750 billion increase, which would constitute the second largest one-time increase ever-surpassed only by the $915 billion increase signed into law by the President's father during his term in office, in November 1990.

That dramatic turnaround in events followed a period of rapidly falling deficits in the 1990s and 4 years of surpluses. In total, as a result of the fiscal discipline put in place in the 1990s, we paid down $400 billion of publicly-held debt and were on the path to eliminate our debt in preparation for the retirement of the baby boom generation. What a sad turn of events we now face today.

It is imperative that we find a way out of this mess. Last week, we were close in the Senate on adopting a bipartisan deal to restore budget discipline and prevent us from digging the hole any deeper. That deal would have extended PAYGO and the Budget Act points of orders, and set a cap on discretionary spending for 2003. Unfortunately, our Republican colleagues blocked its consideration. It seems that many in this chamber are still in denial about the dire position we find ourselves in today as a result of last year's tax cut, the brutal attacks on this nation last September, and the slowdown in the economy.

Let me state again that the Congress has an obligation to ensure that the government avoids default, an event that would have severe consequences for our financial markets and for the government's cost of borrowing funds. However, I feel just as strongly that we should either have passed a much smaller increase—in the range of $100 billion to $200 billion—or passed the current bill in conjunction with the adoption of bipartisan budget measures that would help us stop the fiscal bleeding and return the budget to a path of balance. Simply increasing the debt limit does nothing to force the President and this Congress to deal with the very real fiscal problems we now face today, problems that will only worsen as the baby boomers begin retiring over the next decade. I feel we missed a great opportunity today to adopt those measures as part of the increase in the public debt limit.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, today the Senate voted to increase the debt limit by $450 billion. I agree with many of my colleagues that raising the debt limit is the responsible thing to do. We must protect the full faith and credit of the United States government and we are dangerously close to debt limit. The Department of Treasury has already used extraordinary measures to avoid a default. The time for action is now.

However, I also believe that we must put pressure on the Congress and the Administration to find solutions to our budget problem. We must work together to restore fiscal discipline to the Federal government. The bill approved by the Senate would raise the debt limit by $450 billion which will provide sufficient funds for the government to operate through next spring. I opposed this increase. I would have supported a smaller increase in the debt limit—$150 billion, for example—that would prevent a default but would force an agreement on our budget issues this fall. It would have given us leverage to force a solution to our budget problems.

The debt limit must be raised. It is the responsible thing to do. However, a smaller increase would have kept the pressure on the Congress and the Administration to come to agreement on a long term solution to put our fiscal policy back in touch and develop a plan to eliminate our budget deficits.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, as a longtime proponent of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, I rise to speak concerning S. 2578. While we are told that this bill will increase the Nation's debt limit, what we really voted on today was whether to keep the statutory commitment that Congress has made to the Social Security trust fund.

Social Security's current surplus is the main reason we need to raise the debt limit. Every single dollar of that surplus goes into the Social Security trust fund, and by law, every single dollar of the trust fund counts as part of the total Federal debt. Social Security is expected to run a $160 billion surplus this year, with an even higher surplus next year. Ironically, in order to place that surplus in the Social Security trust fund, the law requires us to increase the debt limit. Only in Washington, DC, can running a surplus increase your level of debt.

Of course, the debt that is included in the Social Security trust fund is just money that the Treasury owes to itself. What really matters for the Government's budget and for the U.S.

economy as a whole is the amount of debt held by the general public. Over the last few years, as a Republican Congress put the brakes on spending, debt held by the public actually fell, lowering the amount of money our Government had to spend on interest payments. However, the war on terrorism, our current recession, and Congress's recent extravagant spending have combined to increase the public debt over the past year. While it is important for Congress to meet its statutory responsibilities to the Social Security trust fund by increasing the debt limit, it is even more important that Congress get its fiscal house in order by working to cut discretionary spending and restore the economy's health.

Time to act on the debt limit is running out. In fact, the Secretary of the Treasury says that the main reason he has called June 28 the "drop-dead" date for raising the debt limit is because on that day, Treasury is scheduled to make a large payment into the Social Security trust fund. I am pleased that the Senate voted to raise the debt limit today, and we can get a final bill to the President for his signature.

Finally, now that we have voted on this wartime increase in the debt limit, I hope that Congress enacts tough budget caps, strong limits on discretionary spending, and productivity-enhancing legislation so we can bring our budget back into balance and restore the American economy to its full potential.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that at 2:15 p.m. today, the Senate proceed to a period for morning business until 3:15 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each; that at 3:15 p.m., the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 8 under the parameters of the unanimous consent agreement of April 23, 2002.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LOTT. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. And I will not object, although I have an inquiry I need to make and I will probably ask consent as a result of that.

We need to go to the Defense authorization bill. That should be our first issue before anything else. I have made the points that we have not done a budget resolution and there is nothing more important than the defense of our country and that we need to go to the Defense authorization bill.

I know there was an agreement entered into on this death tax issue, and I think we should go to it as soon as possible. But I inquire about what is the plan with regard to the Defense authorization bill. I note that S. 2514, the Defense authorization bill, is on the calendar and was reported May 15.

Under my reservation, can I get some information about what is the plan with regard to the Defense authorization bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, as the distinguished Republican leader and I discussed a few minutes ago, the plan is certainly to take up the Defense authorization bill prior to the time we leave for the July 4 recess. That has always been my intention. I have indicated that on several occasions to the Republican leader and to others, and that certainly is my intention again today. We know it will take some time. Senators have expressed an interest in offering some amendments to the bill, and they are in some cases not quite ready yet to go to the bill as they are examining amendment options.

In the meantime, we want to also fulfill our obligation to Senators on the estate tax. We made that commitment some time ago, and we are hoping to do that. We are also talking to the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from California, and others about the cloning-stem cell research debate. We are hoping we can get a unanimous consent agreement to do that on Friday of this week and Monday.

In addition to that, we are working on terrorism insurance, and we are hoping to get its passage before we leave. I would like to get a unanimous consent agreement on that matter.

Senator LOTT mentioned we were not able to get the budget language resolved. Unfortunately, our Republican colleagues objected to doing that last week during the debate on the supplemental, so we were precluded from doing that last week, but we will continue to work to find a way, hopefully without the objections of our Republican colleagues, on the budget as well.

I will reiterate my commitment to the distinguished Republican leader that the Defense authorization bill is legislation we will finish prior to the time we leave for the July 4 recess.

Mr. LOTT. Under my reservation, I note there is a great deal of difference between going to the budget resolution and having full consideration, and agreeing to a number and enforcement numbers on supplemental appropriations. I am prepared to try to help find a solution, to have some limits and some enforcement mechanisms, but obviously the way it has been done for the past 25 years is to have a budget resolution. I do think it is the right thing to do, to go to this death tax issue, and I do want us to continue to work on that.

We are going to get an agreement on how to proceed to the cloning issue because I made that commitment some time ago, as did Senator DASCHLE, to Members on both sides of the issue and on both sides of the aisle. I think we are very close.

I ask to be added to this unanimous consent agreement that following the disposition of this death tax issue, H.R. 8, the next order of business be the Defense authorization bill, which is S. 2514.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, of course we will object to that. Let me reiterate, because the Senator has noted his desire as well to deal with cloning, to deal with terrorism insurance, to deal with a number of other issues, that I know he will be prepared to cooperate in scheduling. We have to take this a step at a time. We may not be ready to deal with Defense tomorrow, but we are going to be ready to deal with it before the end of this work period. So we will continue to do that.

I look forward to working with him to find that date when we can accomplish all we need to accomplish in a very short period of time.

Mr. LOTT. With that assurance then, I withdraw my further reservation, but I again express my concern that if we wait too late on bringing up the Defense authorization bill, being able to complete it before the recess could be a problem. We need to get it done so we can go to the Defense appropriations bill and the military construction appropriations bill.

In view of the objection and the assurances, I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous consent request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 12:30 having arrived, the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:53 p.m., recessed until 2:15 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. CLELAND).

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I have a unanimous consent request to propose. This unanimous consent is to pass a badly needed permanent extension of the adoption tax credit. If we do not pass this extension that was part of President Bush's tax relief bill of last year, it will sunset.

If the adoption tax credit is allowed to sunset, the following things will happen: The adoption tax credit will be cut overnight from a maximum of $10,000 to $5,000. Families adopting special needs children will no longer receive a flat $10,000 credit; instead, they will be limited to a maximum of $6,000. The tax credit no longer will be permitted if we have to extend it each year. Families claiming the tax credit may be pushed into AMT, alternative minimum taxes. The income caps will fall from $150,000 to $75,000 so that fewer families will be eligible for the credit.

There are over 500,000 kids in foster care right now. Let's help them find loving homes. Let's make it easier for families to adopt, not throw up barriers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator?

Mr. KENNEDY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. BUNNING. May I carry on a colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has made a request to engage in a colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would be more than glad to engage in a colloquy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUNNING. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, does he have a specific objection to the permanent extension of the adoption tax credit at this time for some specific reason?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am doing it on behalf of the leadership because I understand we have Members who want to offer amendments and have a somewhat different view than the Senator from Kentucky and want the opportunity to do so and have that determined by the Senate.

For that reason, I object.

Mr. BUNNING. I understand the objection. I hope when the other objectors come forward, we will have an opportunity to discuss this permanent extension of the adoption tax credit and to try to work with whoever the objectors are on that side to make it possible that we have this extension made permanent so families can adopt and continue to get the permanent $10,000 tax credit under which they are now operating. My fear is that will expire and then we will have all kinds of bad consequences.

I thank the Senator and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Kentucky, I think the objective of the Senator is enormously worthwhile. I may very well come out and support the proposal of the Senator from Kentucky. I have been notified by the leadership there are those who have a proposal that may have some different features and they would like to be heard on that particular proposal, but I thank the Senator. I think the issues on adoption are enormously important. I think the idea of trying to provide assistance to those families is incredibly valuable.

I have had the opportunity, for example, to have hearings on families from Canada with grown children who have adopted children with special needs. They adopted these children who had special needs even though they had younger children because, under the Canadian health care system, they offset the medical aspects of the special needs children.

I asked the mother why she adopted special needs children when she had three or four children of her own. Her response was she wanted her children to understand what love was really all about.

I may very well support the Senator and try to go even further than the Senator from Kentucky. I admire him for raising the issue on the floor, and I only object because of what I have been notified by the leadership.

Mr. BUNNING. If the Senator will yield, my personal interest goes beyond just the permanent credit. I have a daughter who had four children and adopted a special needs child, and then had seven more children after that. So I am very familiar with the change in life and the loving care that comes with adopting a special needs child. I am just fearful the Senate will not act in a reasonable manner to make sure this credit becomes permanent. That is my reason for bringing it up at this time.

I understand the objection of the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. Since I am the one who objected, I say I will bring it up with the chairman of the Finance Committee and ask him if he would talk to the Senator from Kentucky about what their plans are and urge him to give us an opportunity to address this issue.

Mr. BUNNING. I thank the Senator and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, it was a Republican President, Theodore Roosevelt, who, in the early 1900s, established our Nation's first national forests and refuges, and his fifth cousin, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who, during the Great Depression of the 1930s, launched the Civilian Conservation Corps. Then, under Dwight Eisenhower in 1960, our country set aside the first part of Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Under Richard Nixon, in 1970, we enacted the Clean Air Act to limit air pollution from cars, utilities, and industries.

Then, 20 years later, a major expansion of that act was signed into law by President George H.W. Bush, the father of now-President Bush.

For 100 years, Republican and Democratic Presidents alike saw that saving America's natural wonders ought not be a partisan political issue. Yet today we see the present Bush administration, time and again, side, with corporate political interests trying to roll back the time-tested and bipartisan measures aimed at protecting our land, our air, and our water.

Let me give some examples. The Federal Superfund Program for cleaning up toxic waste sites is running out of money. It was set up in 1980. It was sponsored, fostered and encouraged under several Presidents. It was set up under President Carter, and continued by President Reagan, then President H.W. Bush, and President Clinton. They all encouraged the use of the Superfund and the concept of the polluter pays.

In 1980, an agreement was struck with the oil companies and the chemical companies. The oil and chemical companies would pay into a trust fund, and when a toxic waste site was found—and this happened after the Love Canal situation had riveted the Nation's attention—there would be money in the trust fund if they could not find the polluter to pay. If the polluter had fled town or had gone bankrupt, there was a fund from which you could then get the toxic waste site cleaned up.

I just toured one of these toxic waste sites about 12 miles west of Orlando, a site that has been there for several decades, a site where at one point what I call a witch's brew of boiling DDT, which formed another chemical compound, had flowed into a holding pond. Why was it a holding pond? Because it was a depression in the ground. And where did that go? It was a sinkhole that went into the Floridian aquifer.

At one point it spilled out of this holding pond into this creek that ran into Lake Apopka, a lake of thousands of acres that used to have 4,000 alligators, and which has 400 now—and you know how sturdy a beast an alligator is.

Yet what the present Bush administration has said is we do not want to continue the polluter pay concept. We want the taxpayer to pay for cleaning up toxic waste sites instead of the polluter. As short as we are on money, with the surplus having evaporated, with the war requiring more and more money, an appropriation from the general fund of taxpayer money for the Superfund may not happen. So sites such as the one 12 miles west of Orlando, are not going to get cleaned up. If we do not re-authorize the polluter pays provisions—which have had bipartisan Presidential support—then we are going to have a serious problem. The site west of Orlando will continue to jeopardize the water supply for all of that part of Florida. That is how serious it is.

Let's take another case. We had the matter of arsenic.

First, the administration was not going to lower the parts per billion in drinking water. It would remain at 50 parts per billion, a standard set before we knew arsenic caused cancer. Based on years of study, the previous Administration had recommended it go down to 10 parts per billion. There was such an outcry that the public was finally heard. And, before the Congress had to act, the administration, relented and adopted the 10 parts per billion standard.

In the Senate 2 months ago, we defeated the administration's attempt to permit oil and gas drilling in the pristine Alaska Wildlife Refuge. Unfortunately, we were unable to overcome the administration's opposition to improving automobile fuel economy standards.

If we are going to get serious about weaning ourselves from our dependence on foreign oil supplies, we are simply going to have to go to where we consume the most energy. The most energy is consumed in the transportation sector. If we don't get serious about increasing the miles per gallon on our automobiles and trucks, we are simply not going to be able to address our dependence on foreign oil. We should follow a balanced approach on the energy question. It should be part production, part conservation, part alternative fuels, part increased use of technology and part renewable fuels. We can use our technology—we have it today—to increase significantly the miles per gallon fuel economy of our transportation sector.

It is so hard, because of all the special interests involved, to pass good public policy. A good example is the defeat of our effort to increase corporate average fuel efficiency standards. But mind you—it is going to take a crisis, such as a terrorist sinking a supertanker in the 19-mile-wide, Strait of Hormuz which suddenly stops the flow of oil traffic out of the Persian Gulf to the industrialized world, to give us a major disruption of energy supplies.

We will rue the day that we did not increase the corporate average fuel efficiency standards of our cars and trucks because the transportation sector accounts for 42 percent of the oil we consume in this country.

Here, again, is another example of where this administration has not faced up to the reality of the environment and of energy. By the way, we have cars today—particularly Hondas and Toyotas—that can get over 50 miles per gallon. These are the hybrid vehicles that shift from gasoline to electric. Because of the computer, the driver and the passengers do not even notice the shift. There is no dimunition of the electrical output of the automobile.

Again, it is another example of where we are just on the wrong course with regard to our energy and to our environmental policies.

If our energy legislation stalls and the environment remains under siege, is it all lost? I don't think it is. Our citizens and their elected representatives can demand and get better.

In the past, we saw an outcry regarding arsenic levels in our drinking water and arsenic used to treat wood. We won on both counts. The arsenic standard for drinking water was dramatically decreased and the wood preserving industry agreed to cease the manufacture of arsenic treated wood for residential uses by the end of 2003. Children's playground equipment will no longer be manufactured with wood treated with arsenic. More needs to be learned about the dangers of arsenic-treated wood but, I will continue to seek answers from the Administration.

Last year we were able, fortunately, to scale back the sale of new oil and gas leases in the Gulf of Mexico right off of the coast of Florida—keeping the drilling more than 100 miles from the Florida shores, preventing the spoiling of our coastal environment and protecting the $60 billion a year tourism industry in Florida.

Senator GRAHAM and I tried to block that sale altogether and we will continue to battle exploration off Florida's coasts. Floridians, regardless of our individual party affiliations, overwhelmingly oppose offshore oil drilling that threatens our beaches, fisheries and tourist-dependent economy.

On saving the environment, our Federal Government today may be split largely along political party lines. But, in Florida, and across the Nation the people are not.

I thank you for the opportunity to share these thoughts with the Senate. I yield the floor.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about an important part of the strategy to lower prescription drug prices for all of our citizens, particularly our seniors who are using about 18 different medications in a year. We have a strategy to focus on with the intent to do everything possible to update Medicare to cover prescription drugs with a comprehensive Medicare prescription drug benefit which is long overdue.

Medicare was set up in 1965. It covers the way health care was provided in 1965. It needs to be updated to cover the primary way we provide health care today, which is outpatient prescription drug coverage.

We also know there are a number of other actions we can take to lower prices for everyone. I had the opportunity yesterday with the Detroit Regional Chamber of Commerce to hear from a number of businesspeople, large and small, who are struggling with their health care insurance premiums, some choosing to no longer be able to provide health care, and others finding they are having to cut back, and hospitals and nursing homes and home health agencies, all affected by the explosion in prescription drug prices.

When we look at the rising cost of health care, the majority of it is the cost of prescription drugs. A number of us have looked at what it is we can do to bring more competition, to bring prices down, and to make it more fair for Americans.

Americans today are underwriting the cost of research. I am very proud that, through the National Institutes of Health, we are providing billions of dollars in basic research. We support companies then taking that research, and we allow them to write off their research costs as well as their advertising and other costs to be able to provide the necessary research and development for new prescription drugs. We give them a patent to protect their development so they can recover their cost. But at the end of that process, we find that Americans, even after we have heavily subsidized, supported, and helped pay for the research and development, are paying the highest prices in the world.

One of the reasons is that there was a law passed in the late 1980s that puts a fence around the border of the United States as it relates to prescription drugs. It says that we as Americans cannot go across the border to Canada to purchase American-made, FDA-approved and safe drugs that are sold to Canada, on average, at half the price. We can't go to any other country as well.

In fact, as was shown in the Wall Street Journal last Friday in a front page article, every time the European Union or Canada or some other country negotiates lower prices for their citizens, the drug companies make it up by raising American prices, even though we are the ones paying for the research that creates the new miracle drugs.

To demonstrate this and to promote legislation, S. 2244, which Senator DORGAN, Senator JEFFORDS, myself, and many others, have introduced—it is a bipartisan bill to bring down this barrier at the border so Americans can get the very best prescription drugs at the very best prices from Canada—a number of us have been helping to sponsor bus trips to Canada to make the point.

This is a picture of a number of us who were joining, from the House and Senate last week, a bus in front of the Capitol. This is a bus that the Alliance for Retired Americans has been sponsoring. In fact, we have over 14 different trips planned in the next several days into Canada. We kicked off one in Detroit yesterday where a group of citizens got on the bus to go 5 minutes across the Ambassador Bridge, in which they were able to lower their prices on average by half, just by going across the bridge.

This is not about putting seniors or families on buses to go across bridges to get lower prices. This is about dropping the barrier at the border. This is protectionist legislation that does not allow us to have business relationships across the border to bring back those American-made drugs at a reduced price.

We can trade with Canada on agricultural products, manufacturing products, all kinds of things. People go back and forth across the border and do business every day. But when it comes to prescription drugs, we have not been able to do that. That creates a situation where we don't see the kind of pressure on our companies to be competitive and fair to Americans.

We want to get people off the bus. We want those prescriptions coming back to the United States to our neighborhood pharmacy, so a senior can walk in and get the reduced price.

I will just share with you some of the price differences we have seen as we have taken the bus trips to Canada from Michigan. Zocor, for high cholesterol, if you need to purchase this in Michigan, the price will be somewhere in the range of $109. If you drive that 5-minute bus trip across the border, you can get that same Zocor for $46. If we look at Prilosec for heartburn and ulcer relief, $115 in Michigan; $55 across the border to Canada.

Probably one of the most disturbing ones for me is a breast cancer treatment drug. I have taken to Canada breast cancer patients, who are in desperate need of this lifesaving treatment and medication. Tamoxifen is a well-known breast cancer treatment, $136.50 in Michigan; $15.92 across the bridge.

There is something wrong with this picture. There is something wrong when Americans are supporting and funding the development and underwriting costs and subsidizing, through tax deductions and tax credits, the development of these lifesaving medications, and we are paying so much more for these lifesaving drugs. It makes no sense.

I urge my colleagues to support our effort, to come on as cosponsors and support the effort to open our borders and lower prices for prescription drugs. We have a bipartisan bill, S. 2244. The time is now. We want to get the seniors off the bus, get lower priced prescriptions into the local pharmacy or the hospital or into the clinics around the State of Michigan. It is time to do that. It is past time to lower the prices for people.

This isn't the same as buying a new pair of tennis shoes. It is not the same as buying a new car, although coming from Michigan, I want to see people buy a new car every year. But if they don't, it is not going to threaten their life. But if a breast cancer patient does not get her Tamoxifen, it does threaten her life. That is the difference.

This is medicine. It is not optional. It is time we understand that and get serious about lowering prices, about creating the competition that will allow us to lower prices.

I have never seen an issue that affects more the economy of this country. It affects every businessperson trying to provide health insurance for themselves and their employees. It affects our universities' health clinics. The president of Michigan State University came to me expressing great concern about his rising health care premiums and the requirement that he was going to have to lay off people because they couldn't keep paying these rising costs, most of it from prescription drugs, and maintain the same number of staff at the university. This is ridiculous.

Most importantly, this is ridiculous because of what it means to our families and our seniors. Yesterday on the bus were a couple who are paying $1,300 a month for their prescriptions, people on a fixed income. They were getting on that bus yesterday to go to Windsor, Canada, out of desperation to lower their prices so they could live independently in their own home and not have to be hospitalized or go into a nursing home and receive the kind of medicine they need.

It is wrong that we are seeing this kind of disparity. I urge my colleagues, while we are working on the important issue of Medicare prescription drug coverage, that we do something today to lower prices. We can do something right now by just simply opening the border to Canada and making sure that our citizens get the prices shown by these yellow bars on this chart, instead of paying the high prices we see they are paying right now.

I thank you, Mr. President. I urge my colleagues to get engaged in one of the most important issues affecting seniors and our families today. It is time to bring the prices down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

EDUCATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in the Washington Post today in the front section on page A3, there is an article titled: "Report Urges Stricter Tests for Teachers, Expertise Is Stressed Over Theory."

This is an important report. It is one that underscores what a number of other reports have said, including those by the National Center on Education Information, which is a report that was out earlier this year, and the was a very solid report from 1996, which is most comprehensive on teacher quality, called "What Matters Most: Teaching for America's Future." The Administration's report is very important because it outlines the challenges we face.

I want to give an assurance to the American people that we do not need more legislation. We already have the legislation in place in the No Child Left Behind Act, and in the Higher Education Act of 1998, that, if fully implemented and funded, would address the real challenges we are facing in the States. We know that we need to hire over 2 million teachers over the next ten years, we need to improve teacher preparation, and we need to increase professional development. But we don't need new legislation. The No Child Left Behind Act requires 100-highly percent qualified teachers in our classrooms in four years. I believe that is the most important ingredient to have a well-qualified teacher in every classroom, increase professional development each year, and provide funding for mentoring.

The Higher Education Act, title II, provides funding for States and universities to improve the teacher preparation with high-quality strategies, including improving alternative routes to certification, and improving the quality of colleges of education.

Mr. President, what is left out of the report is the need for resources to help states meet these goals. We need resources to be able to achieve these goals for the children in this country. We need to do more than just count on alternative routes to certification. Alternative routes to certification could provide, at best, one-third of all of the teachers we need in our public school systems. For example, the Troops to Teachers only places about 700 teachers per year. We need to hire more than 200,000 teachers per year to address the shortages. Many of these new teachers need to have specialized training in special education, math and bilingual education. The alternative route programs can provide some assistance, but they are not the core of the solution. The solution lies in improving all of the teacher preparation and training programs and providing all teachers with the ongoing support they need once they are in the classroom.

Some traditional teacher preparation programs and alternative routes are successful. All the successful programs have the same characteristics. The recent report by the National Center on Educational Information said that a successful alternative route program is specifically designed to recruit individuals with college degrees; that is, the emphasis is on content. Such a program has a rigorous screening process to attract high-quality candidates. The program is field based to give practical experience through internships. New teachers receive mentoring from trained teachers. Candidates must meet high standards upon completion.

The 1996 report had similar characteristics for a high-quality teacher preparation program at universities: organize teacher education around standards for students and teachers; develop and extend year-long programs with year-long internships; create and fund mentoring programs; and create high-quality sources of professional development for ongoing support.

So the Administration's report is useful and valuable today, but this is something we have understood now for a number of years. It really is nothing very new. The statistics may give us more recent information on particular States, but we know what needs to be done. We outlined in the No Child Left Behind legislation a series of programs to help and assist the States to address the teacher shortage, but the administration has requested zero increase in their proposed budget for improved teacher quality and reduced class size. There is an excellent study that says all these things need to be done—better training, recruitment, professional development and mentoring. We have to do them. But when it comes to the resources to be provided, we are just not getting it from the administration. That, I think, is a matter of enormous importance.

All of us want to address the kinds of needs that are outlined in this report. It is a good report. But in order to do that, it means funding the various programs that we have that are out there and in existence.

Mr. President, I want to mention several of the programs that the administration failed to fund this year that cut teacher quality programs by $155 million this year. They include: The elimination of funding for preparing tomorrow's teachers to use technology is enormously important. You can get the new technology in the classroom, but unless the teacher understands how to use the technology and how to develop the curriculum to use the technology, you have missed the opportunity for success.

This program was oversubscribed, but it was eliminated by the Administration. Funding for the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards, which is enormously important, was eliminated. Certification by the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards, all across the country, is the key for increasing compensation, increasing professionalism, and increasing success. The National Board has been incredibly important and effective and yet the Bush Administration eliminates it.

The Bush budget eliminates programs to prepare teachers to teach writing and civics, and provides a 50-percent cut in grants to help train teachers to teach American history.

So the point I am making, Mr. President, is that we can have these studies and they can point out what the problem is, but we know what the problem is, but we already know what the problem is. What it takes now is the increased investment in the No Child Left Behind Act and other programs that can really make a difference in terms of teacher quality.

We have to look at this in a comprehensive manner. We need to improve working conditions for teachers, including increasing pay, increasing the prestige of teaching, and improving schools so they are safe, modern places in which teachers can work and children can learn. Many schools have obsolete, crumbling, and inadequate facilities. All teachers and students deserve safe, modern facilities with up-to-date technology. Sending teachers and children to dilapidated and overcrowded classrooms sends an unacceptable message. It tells them they don't matter. No CEO would tolerate a leaky ceiling in the boardroom—and no teacher should have to tolerate it in the classroom.

This is all part of what we have to understand if we are going to expect that we are going to get quality teachers to teach in our schools.

Mr. President, this is just a final point I want to mention on the subject. Despite the goals we share in the recent report, I am concerned that the administration is not meeting the letter of the law in implementing the requirements of the No Child Left Behind Act to ensure a high-quality teacher in every classroom.

In the draft guidance of the new ESEA title II Teaching Quality Program, released on June 6, the Department proposes a large loophole for alternative routes to certification that I believe violates the law and could lower teacher quality.

The guidance says: "Any Teacher who has obtained full state certification, whether he or she has achieved certification through traditional or alternative routes, has a four-year college degree, and has demonstrated subject matter competence, is considered to be highly qualified under the law. Teachers who are participating in an alternative route program may be considered to meet certification requirements of the definition of a highly qualified teacher if participants in the program are permitted by the state to assume functions as regular classroom teachers and are making satisfactory progress towards full certification as prescribed by the state and the program."

This creates a double standard when it comes to teachers working through alternate routes compared to teachers working through the regular certification program—those working through the regular certification program must be fully certified—no emergency, temporary provisional certification.

Alternate route teachers can be considered highly qualified while holding a provisional certification while they are working to obtain full certification. This is inconsistent with the definition in the ESEA which holds the same standards for all teachers.

I hope the draft guidance will be changed to ensure when we say all teachers will be highly qualified, we mean all teachers are highly qualified. We do not want to find on the one hand statements about the importance of these findings, and then on the other hand have the drafting of rules and regulations which are going to result in lower standards for the teachers in the classroom.

We welcome this report, but it comes back again to the issue of whether we are prepared to help the States, schools, parents, and children in this country by helping ensure there is a well-qualified teacher in every classroom. We have the legislation. We have followed these various recommendations, and all we need is the investment to make this happen. That is why we are going to continue to battle for the children of this country by insisting that we have an adequate budget invested in teacher quality.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEATH TAX ELIMINATION ACT OF 2001

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report H.R. 8.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 8) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to phase out the estate and gift taxes over a 10-year period, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent Senators GRAMM and KYL be recognized for 5 minutes each;

however they want to divide up the 10 minutes to speak on the general subject of the estate tax, and Senator CONRAD be recognized for up to 10 minutes. Following that, we would be, I believe, in a position to lay down the first-degree amendment at that time pursuant to the order and the 2-hour time will start running at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, let me take a couple of minutes to tell people where we are. We worked out an agreement several weeks ago to debate the permanent repeal of the death tax. I thank the majority leader for agreeing to allow this to happen. We now have a unanimous consent agreement that dictates how the debate will occur. I will go over it so everyone will know exactly what we are doing.

Under the unanimous consent agreement, a majority member, a Democrat, will be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment related to the death tax. That amendment, by a majority member, will be subject to two second-degree amendments also offered by majority members. Those two second-degree amendments will be disposed of—either with a point of order, a motion to table, or a vote—and will be accepted or rejected. Then there will be one amendment standing, whether it is amended or not, and it will be voted on. Then I will be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment. It will not be subject to an amendment. I will offer an amendment identical to the permanent repeal of the death tax adopted by the House of Representatives. So if my amendment is be adopted, the bill would again pass the House and the President could sign it into law.

If any other amendments should be adopted, we have to have a debate as to whether we would name conferees and we would potentially have to go to conference with the House.

That is basically where we are. We are now awaiting the offering of a first-degree amendment. Then that will be subject to two second-degree amendments, offered by the majority. We will vote on each one of them, in order, and then we will vote on the underlying amendment. I assume we would probably get through one vote this afternoon and then we would have three votes tomorrow and we would finish up tomorrow sometime in the mid-early afternoon if all the time is used.

I remind my colleagues there are 2 hours on the first second-degree amendment, 2 hours on the second second-degree amendment, 2 hours on the underlying first degree, and then there would be 2 hours on my amendment which would repeal the death tax, in exactly the same form the House has passed, and then there would be a vote on it and we would be finished.

That is where we are in terms of the structure of the debate. I wanted everyone to understand exactly where we are. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, this afternoon we begin a very important debate on the question of the estate tax. My friends on the other side characterize it as a death tax. It is really not. There is no such thing as a death tax in America. Nobody pays taxes at death. There is an estate tax. For estates over a certain amount, they contribute to the revenue of the Federal Government by paying an estate tax.

The problem with the current estate tax is that it cuts in at too low a level. Currently, estates begin to be taxed at about $1 million. The fact is, only about 2 percent of all estates pay any tax, even under that circumstance. But with what has happened in the national economy, many of us believe we do need to reform the estate tax—not eliminate it but reform it.

Why? First of all, because it is not fair to have the estate tax cut in at that level, given the increase in assets that has occurred in the country in the last decade. At the same time, it does not make much sense to us to eliminate the estate tax completely because of the cost. What our friends on the other side of the aisle are proposing is a $100 billion cost in this decade and a $740 billion cost in the next decade, right at the time the baby boom generation retires—all of this in the context of budget deficits as far as we can see.

I believe we ought to reform the estate tax. I believe we ought to increase the level at which it cuts in on individuals and their families. But to eliminate the estate tax and dig the deficit hole deeper, put us deeper into debt and take it all out of Social Security, I do not think is defensible.

Last year, the President said this about paying down the debt:

> My budget pays down a record amount of national debt. We will pay off $2 trillion of debt over the next decade. That will be the largest debt reduction of any country, ever. Future generations should not be forced to pay back money that we have borrowed. We owe this kind of responsibility to our children and grandchildren.

What a difference a year makes, because just a few hours ago we responded to the President's request for the biggest increase in the debt—the second biggest increase in the debt in our Nation's history. That is what we did just hours ago. Has this Chamber already forgotten? Have we already forgotten that we just responded to the President, who said he was going to pay down the biggest amount of debt in our Nation's history, in fact he said the biggest amount of any country ever? And now, just 2 hours ago, 3 hours ago, we responded to his request for not debt paydown but the biggest expansion of the debt—the second biggest expansion in our Nation's history?

Here is the comparison. The only time we had a bigger increase in the debt than what the President is seeking was when his father was President. When his father was President, we had to increase the debt by $915 billion, in November of 1990. Now this President comes and asks for a $750 billion increase in the debt. That is after telling us last year he was going to pay down the debt by the maximum amount possible, the biggest of any country ever.

Last year, the President told us it would be 7 years before we would have to increase any debt. In August of last year, he told us it would be 3 years before any increase in the debt. In December 2001, he told us 2 months. Right now, the Treasury Department is using extraordinary means to finance the debt of the United States. They are taking from the retirement funds of Federal employees to cover the Federal debt.

Let me say this. If any private company tried that, they would be on their way to a Federal facility, but it would not be the White House of the United States, it would not be the Congress of the United States, they would be on their way to a Federal penitentiary because that is a violation of Federal law. But that is what is going on right now.

You recall in the previous administration they did that for a short time and in the House of Representatives our friends across the aisle filed impeachment proceedings against the Secretary of the Treasury for doing what this Secretary of the Treasury is now doing.

Can we forget what just happened a few hours ago, when there was a vote here to increase the debt of the United States by $450 billion? The President requested $750 billion in increased debt. We increased it $450 billion.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 6 minutes of his 10; 4 minutes remain.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, remember last year? We have to put this in context. We have to think about the circumstance within which we are making decisions. Last year, we were told there was going to be $5.6 trillion of surpluses over the next decade. That is what we were told just last year. Now we look at the budget circumstance of the United States, and the surpluses are all gone. There are no surpluses. In fact, if we look at the President's budget and we look at the latest shortfall in revenues and we look at the stimulus package just passed, what we see over the next decade is not $5.6 trillion of surpluses, what we see is $600 billion of deficits. It is a pretty stunning turnaround. In 1 year we go from $5.6 trillion of surpluses to $600 billion of deficits. And our friends on the other side want to dig the hole much deeper—much deeper—by adding $100 billion, and another cost in the next 10 years of $740 billion, right at the time the baby boom generation retires. It does not make much sense to me to eliminate this estate tax instead of reforming it.

Yes, let's address the problems that exist with the estate tax. Let's increase the amount of the exemption in a responsible and rational way. But let's not dig the hole deeper and deeper with respect to the deficits and debt of this country.

Here is where we are, looking back to 1992, when there were deep deficits, not counting Social Security. We were able, over a period of years, to pull our country out of this deficit and debt morass. We were able to run surpluses for 3 years. But look at what happened last year. We are right back in the soup. For anybody who thinks it is going to be short-lived, here is the hard reality. We are poised to be back in deficit for the entire next decade—billions, hundreds of billions of dollars of deficit and debt.

Again, I say our friends on the other side, in their proposal, say: Don't worry about that; don't worry about all this red ink; don't worry about all these deficits; don't worry about piling up the debt; let's just go out there and cut some more taxes and not pay for it. That is their answer. They will add another $100 billion to these deficits over the next decade. But what is really stunning is in the second 10-year period they would take another $740 billion right out of Social Security trust funds.

There is an alternative that deals both with the question of reforming the estate tax and making it more fair and at the same time reducing the cost dramatically over what our friends on the other side of the aisle are proposing.

What I am proposing is immediate relief. Take the estate tax exemption to $3 million next year—$1 million now, and increase that to $3 million next year—$6 million for a couple for 2009, and thereafter the exemption would increase to $3.5 million. The maximum estate tax rate would be frozen at 50 percent. We retain the stepped-up basis.

Mr. President, I ask for an additional 3½ minutes and for the other side as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, we have retained the stepped-up basis. The other side's proposal goes to what is called a carryover basis.

This is a hugely important issue that people should understand. We will have a chance to go into it as we proceed.

Let me say at this point that in a stepped-up basis, when a relative dies, you inherit their property at its value at the time they die.

That is a very important concept to understand. Let me repeat it.

Under a stepped-up basis, you pay future taxes based on the value of the property of the loved one that is giving you the property. You pay on the basis of the value of the property at the time they died—not what they paid for it but the value at the time they died.

Under the alternative proposal offered on the other side, you are going to go to what is called a carryover basis. You are not going to pay future taxes based on the value at the time that your relative died. You are going to go back to the value of what they paid for it.

Let us say you inherit a farm. You don't inherit the value of the farm at the time your father died or your grandfather died. You are going to pay future taxes based on what they paid for the property.

There is a big difference between our proposals. It is an accounting nightmare.

What our friends are proposing we tried before—the carryover basis, going back to what grandpa paid for a property. It was an administrative nightmare for all concerned. And we quickly abandoned it. They want to go back to the bad, old days.

Not only does this proposal fundamentally reform the estate tax and make it more fair and avoid going to carryover basis, but it also saves hundreds of billions of dollars in the second decade. In this decade it saves $87 billion. The cost of our proposal in this decade is $12.5 billion. The cost of their proposal is $99.4 billion.

Under the proposal I am making, by 2009, only .3 percent of estates will face any estate tax liability. That means 99.7 percent of estates would pay zero, nothing, have no estate tax liability.

We will have more to say about this as we go forward.

At this point, I want to yield the floor so my colleague from Arizona, Senator KYL, can have a chance at this initial moment to speak on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, in addition to the 3 minutes granted by the extension, I inquire about how much time remains on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes.

Mr. KYL. Which includes the 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. KYL. I will speak for 5 minutes, and our colleague from Texas will speak for 5 minutes.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, let me make three points.

First of all, I find it very interesting that our Democratic colleague is worried about the debt of the United States. This does not seem to be much of a concern to him or his colleagues when they vote for spending bills around here.

Just recently—I took some of the more recent ones—the railroad retirement bill was $15 billion in one payment. I voted against that. The farm bill was $82.8 billion over the baseline, over the budgeted amount. I voted against that.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KYL. I am happy to yield for a moment—for a moment, please.

Mr. CONRAD. The amount that the Senator refers to is not over the budget. Every penny of the money in the farm bill is within the budget. Does he acknowledge that?

Mr. KYL. No. Let me reiterate what I said. The fact is that the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, chairman of the Budget Committee, has not been able to bring a budget to the floor. So there is no budget. We are talking about the baseline. I believe my number is accurate with respect thereto. We are spending billions on this farm program above what we originally had decided to spend; under trade adjustment assistance, over $11 billion over the President's request—a 10-year number; in the supplemental that we just passed—a 1-year number—about $4 billion above the President's request.

The highway bill is about 5.7 above the President's request.

My point is that it seems to be a little contradictory when some colleagues are so concerned about the debt, and all of a sudden they are happy to spend very large sums of money above the baseline.

Let us get into this debt business a little bit more. With what do we pay down debt?

We pay down debt with Social Security income. Under Social Security revenues—the FICA tax—you pay in 7.6 percent and your employer pays 7.6 percent. That is Social Security.

The death tax receipts don't pay for Social Security. Not one nickel of the death tax collections or estate tax collections pay for Social Security benefits—not one nickel. If we repeal the entire death tax today, Social Security wouldn't lose one nickel because that isn't where Social Security gets its money. You all know where Social Security gets its money—from the FICA tax, the Social Security payments. Those right now are in surplus.

What do we do with the surplus? We pay down the debt with it.

If my colleagues are worried about the need to pay down the debt, then they are talking about taxes, Social Security money, and paying down the debt with that. That is exactly what happens every single year. We all agree to that.

If they are worried about taking away money for Social Security, then they need to be worried about the Social Security tax collections and not the estate tax collections. None of that money goes for Social Security.

This is a bogus argument that Social Security would in any way be affected by a reduction of the estate tax collections.

Finally, to this argument that somehow it is unfair for us to step up the basis—or, rather, to carry over the basis rather than have a stepped-up basis, this may seem to be an arcane argument to folks who aren't familiar with these terms. Here in practical terms is what it means.

You have a billionaire and he dies. His wife inherits the money. Under the proposal of the Senator from North Dakota, if the spouse decides the day after her dear loved one's departure to sell all of that property, cash it in, do you know how much she pays in capital gains tax? Zero. Zip. Nothing. That is how much you pay under the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

Under our proposal, you would pay the capital gains on the original value of the property.

If her dear loved one bought that property for $100 million way back when and sells it for $1 billion, that is a $900 million gain. She would pay a capital gains tax on that again.

Our idea is that death should not be a taxable event. You can't anticipate it. It is the worst possible time to have to pay a tax. It is not fair. Most of the Tax Code says you pay a tax when you do something knowing what the tax consequences will be. You earn money, you sell property—those are taxable events. What we are doing is replacing one tax for another.

The estate tax is unfair, it is wrong, and it should be repealed. It will be replaced by a capital gains tax.

The interesting thing about it is that really wealthy people will end up paying a tax when they sell that property; whereas, they would not pay nearly as much tax as they would under the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

What it really boils down to is you are still paying the tax. What it really boils down to is a matter of policy. You are going to pay sooner or later. But do you want to pay with death being the taxable event or do you want to pay a tax based on an economic decision you made knowing what the tax consequences would be. That is what our Tax Code theory is and the death tax should comport with that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 4½ minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. I don't mind yielding to my Democratic colleague.

Mr. CONRAD. I inquire as to the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four and one-half minutes remain to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONRAD. Do I have time on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, you do not.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, we all understand that the death tax basically says if somebody works a lifetime, they scrimp and save and sacrifice, they plow the money back into their business or their farm or their estate, they do it for their family, and then they die, then their family has to sell their business or sell their farm or sell off their estate to give the government a double taxation of 55 cents out of every dollar they have earned in their lives. It is an absolute outrage. The American people believe that.

Today and tomorrow, as we debate this issue, our Democrat colleagues are not going to defend the death tax as such. They are going to try to make a series of points. You are going to get to hear it in the long debate, but since we are waiting for them to come forward with their amendment, I want to make some points early on. They are going to say: OK, it is wrong to make people sell off their life's work, but shouldn't we redistribute wealth? Shouldn't we say that above a certain level we are going to have a death tax? They are basically going to try to appeal to this old class struggle, this old Marxist idea that has been rejected everywhere else in the world but still carries currency in the United States of America.

The second thing they will do is say: Look, we wanted to repeal the death tax but we can't afford it. We just can't afford it. Let me remind my colleagues, we don't have to go way back to the railroad retirement debate of last year to see that this is not true. Let's go to last Thursday. Last Thursday this body, the Senate, voted overwhelmingly—and I think almost every Democrat Member of the Senate voted for the bill—to spend $14 billion more than the President requested for nonemergency items in a supplemental appropriation. That's $14 billion more than the President asked for in nonemergency items. That is 4 times what it costs to repeal the death tax next year.

So our colleagues today are brokenhearted: You would repeal the death tax and deny the Government that money, and we are so worried. They are worried about the deficit and the debt. Where were they Thursday? Where were they Thursday night? I was here. I raised a point of order against 80 amendments. Where were they? They were willing to spend four times as much this coming year on spending the President didn't ask for in an emergency bill than it would cost to repeal the death tax.

On the farm bill, they were willing to spend seven times as much as the cost of repealing the death tax. Now they are worried about the debt. They are worried about the deficit. But last month when we passed this bloated, inflated farm bill, they were willing to spend seven times as much as it would cost this coming year to repeal the death tax. They were not worried then, but they are really worried today.

Then there was the energy tax incentive. They weren't worried then. They were willing to spend more on energy tax incentives than it would cost next year to repeal the death tax.

Finally, just to add insult to injury, on the budget that was reported on a straight party-line vote out of the Budget Committee, the Democrat majority increased nondefense discretionary spending by a whopping $105.8 billion above the level requested by the President. In other words, when they cast that vote, they could afford $106 billion. That is more than enough to fund the repeal of the death tax for the next 10 years.

I know they are upset today. They are very upset about the deficit and the debt. But they are only upset when we are talking about letting people keep more of what they earn. They are never, ever upset when it comes to spending money.

They write a budget that spends more money on new discretionary programs than repealing the death tax would cost, but when it is time to let people keep money, they are worried.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. It is my understanding that all time has been used that was previously allocated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I would now say to the Chair that under the unanimous consent request before the Senate, there is an opportunity now for the majority to lay down an amendment; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask that Senator CONRAD be recognized for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Dakota.

AMENDMENT NO. 3831

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. VALUATION RULES FOR CERTAIN TRANSFERS OF NONBUSINESS ASSETS; LIMITATION ON MINORITY DISCOUNTS.

(a) In General.—Section 2031 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to definition of gross estate) is amended by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsections:

"(d) Valuation Rules for Certain Transfers of Nonbusiness Assets.—For purposes of this chapter and chapter 12—

"(1) In general.—In the case of the transfer of any interest in an entity other than an interest which is actively traded (within the meaning of section 1092)—

"(A) the value of any nonbusiness assets held by the entity shall be determined as if the transferor had transferred such assets directly to the transferee (and no valuation discount shall be allowed with respect to such nonbusiness assets), and

"(B) the nonbusiness assets shall not be taken into account in determining the value of the interest in the entity.

"(2) Nonbusiness assets.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) In general.—The term 'nonbusiness asset' means any asset which is not used in the active conduct of 1 or more trades or businesses.

"(B) Exception for certain passive assets.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C), a passive asset shall not be treated for purposes of subparagraph (A) as used in the active conduct of a trade or business unless—

"(i) the asset is property described in paragraph (1) or (4) of section 1221(a) or is a hedge with respect to such property, or

"(ii) the asset is real property used in the active conduct of 1 or more real property trades or businesses (within the meaning of section 469(c)(7)(C)) in which the transferor materially participates and with respect to which the transferor meets the requirements of section 469(c)(7)(B)(ii).

For purposes of clause (ii), material participation shall be determined under the rules of section 469(h), except that section 469(h)(3) shall be applied without regard to the limitation to farming activity.

"(C) Exception for working capital.—Any asset (including a passive asset) which is held as a part of the reasonably required working capital needs of a trade or business shall be treated as used in the active conduct of a trade or business.

"(3) Passive asset.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'passive asset' means any—

"(A) cash or cash equivalents,

"(B) except to the extent provided by the Secretary, stock in a corporation or any other equity, profits, or capital interest in any entity,

"(J) any other asset specified in regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

"(4) Look-thru rules.—

"(A) In general.—If a nonbusiness asset of an entity consists of a 10-percent interest in any other entity, this subsection shall be applied by disregarding the 10-percent interest and by treating the entity as holding directly its ratable share of the assets of the other entity. This subparagraph shall be applied successively to any 10-percent interest of such other entity in any other entity.

"(B) 10-percent interest.—The term '10-percent interest' means—

"(e) Limitation on Minority Discounts.—For purposes of this chapter and chapter 12, in the case of the transfer of any interest in an entity other than an interest which is actively traded (within the meaning of section 1092), no discount shall be allowed by reason of the fact that the transferee does not have control of such entity if the transferee and members of the family (as defined in section 2032A(e)(2)) of the transferee have control of such entity.".

(b) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I have already described what my amendment does. I will use the first part of my time to answer the very creative arguments made by my colleagues on the other side. I have never heard such imaginative arguments on the Senate floor. This is really intriguing.

They start out by justifying eliminating the estate tax by an attack on the farm bill, saying the farm bill was over the budget and, therefore, what does it matter if we take another $700 billion out of Social Security in order to eliminate the estate tax. How soon they have forgotten their own votes. They voted for the farm bill budget which they decry. Yes, they did. The farm bill budget was provided for in the last budget resolution.

Our colleagues on the other side of the aisle voted aye. They voted for the Republican budget resolution. The Republican budget resolution passed on the floor of the Senate was their resolution. Their colleagues in the House passed exactly the same budget resolution. Do you know what else? Their President proposed a budget with exactly that amount of money in it for the farm bill.

I hate to rain on their parade, but they supported the Republican budget resolution that funded the farm bill. That was their budget resolution. That was their proposal. They voted for it. Now they come out here and attack it. They should have been here voting against their own budget resolution because that is what provided the budget for the new farm bill.

The Senator from Texas talks about the bill that just passed that was requested by the President. He has attacked the supplemental appropriations bill that was requested by the President. The difference between what we passed here, which he attacks, and what the House of Representatives passed, according to the Congressional Budget Office, is $1.3 billion, not the $10 billion to which he referred. The $10 billion he referred to is an absolute myth. There is $1.3 billion of difference between what the Senate passed and the House passed.

By the way, the President praised what the House passed and condemned what the Senate passed. In a $30 billion bill, there was only $1 billion difference. Where is the difference? The Senate bill has more money for first responders, the policemen and the firemen we expect to protect this Nation, a $600 million difference there. There was $300 million more in the Senate bill than the House bill to protect our nuclear facilities.

Has anybody read the paper the last few days? Of what did the administration warn us? They warned us of a "dirty" bomb attack on the Capitol of the United States. What is a "dirty" bomb? It is a regular bomb with nuclear fissile material around it. Do you know what would happen if that kind of bomb were dropped in the vicinity of the Capitol? The former Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral Owens, told me in a breakfast just 2 weeks ago, it would make the Capitol area uninhabitable in a mile circumference for 400 years.

From where might that nuclear fissile material come? It might come from our own labs. That is why the Senate added $300 million to protect our nuclear facilities and added $650 million for our first responders—our policemen and firemen—and added another $700 million to protect our ports, because one of the things we know is that nuclear fissile material might come into this country everyday in thousands of containers. And only 2 percent are checked.

So is this some big, wasteful spending program to protect our nuclear facilities, to protect our ports and to provide funding to our first responders? I don't think so. That is the difference between the House bill the President praised and the Senate bill that the President attacked. There is no $10 billion difference. That is total fiction.

Let's go back to the question of the fundamental issue before us. Is spending a threat to our fiscal future? Absolutely. But our fiscal future is determined not just by spending, but by the relationship between spending and revenue. Deficits are created by an imbalance between spending and revenue. You only have deficits when you spend more than your income.

We know the circumstance we face as a nation. It has become abundantly clear to all of us. We face a circumstance in which we see in our future an ocean of red ink. Here it is. We go back to 1992 on this chart. We were facing deficits, not counting Social Security, of $341 billion. In 1993, we passed a 5-year plan that started lifting us out of deficit.

By the way, not one of our friends on the other side voted for it. It was the plan that started lifting us out of deficit.

Each year, we were coming out of deficit. Then in 1997, on a bipartisan basis, we passed a plan that finished the job. We actually got back into surplus. We were there for 3 years, and then we got plunged back into the deficit hole by the events of last year: No. 1, the tax cut advocated by our friends on the other side; No. 2, the attack on this country; No. 3, the economic slowdown.

When you wonder where the surpluses went, here is what we find: 42 percent went to the tax cuts that were passed last year; 23 percent went to the economic slowdown; 18 percent went to the increased costs of the attack on our country; 17 percent are due to technical changes, mostly underestimations of the cost of Medicare and Medicaid.

We have before us a fundamental question: How are we going to deal with this ocean of red ink? Our friends on the other side say: Well, let's keep digging the hole deeper. It doesn't matter. We were for eliminating the estate tax last year, and we are still for it. It doesn't matter that the surpluses have evaporated. It doesn't matter that the money is all gone. We are going to stay steady on this course—even if the course leads to insolvency. It doesn't matter that just a few hours ago this Chamber voted to increase the debt of the United States by $450 billion.

That is after the President and our friends on the other side promised us last year that they had a financial plan that was going to lead to the maximum paydown of our debt. That is what they said a year ago. They had a plan that would lead to the maximum paydown of the debt. Now they have asked for the second biggest increase in the debt in our Nation's history. They told us a year ago that we would have surpluses of $5.6 trillion in the next decade. Now the money is all gone. Instead of surpluses, there are deficits. That is the hard reality.

So the question before us is, what do we do about the estate tax? Let me stipulate that they have one part of this argument right. We need to change the estate tax. We should not leave it the way it is. We should not let it hit people with a million dollars of assets. We ought to increase it. That is what my proposal does. My proposal goes to $3 million next year, $6 million for a couple. You don't have to wait until 2007, as you do under their proposal. We go to $3 million for an individual and $6 million for a couple next year. You don't have to pay a penny of estate tax. In 2009, we go to $3.9 million.

On their side, they talk about how much they care about helping people. But they want to wait. They want to wait. I don't want to wait. I want to go to $3 million for an individual, $6 million for a couple next year. Give them the estate tax relief they deserve. Don't eliminate it. Don't say to the wealthiest among us—the super wealthy—you don't ever have to face any estate tax. Why? Because it costs too much, Mr. President. Their proposal costs $99 billion—$99 billion in this decade.

The proposal I am making costs $12.6 billion in this decade. So it seems to me it is a pretty good proposal. No. 1, it gives immediate and substantial relief to estates by going from a million dollars of exemption to $3 million for an individual, $6 million a couple, not in 2007 or in 2008, but next year. No. 2, it costs a lot less because you don't eliminate the estate tax, you reform it. Their plan costs $99.4 billion. Mine costs $12.6 billion.

Mine includes a stepped-up basis rather than a carryover basis. I know that is confusing and I know those are words most people don't use. What it means is simply this: Under my plan, you will pay future taxes based on the value of the assets you inherit at the time you inherit them. You will not be paying taxes based on what grandpa paid for the asset you inherited. Think of the difference. Not only is that a big tax difference, that is a big difference in terms of practicality and simplification.

We tried what they are proposing, this idea of carryover basis, this idea that you are going to go back to the value of what grandpa paid for the farm, of what grandpa paid for the stock, of what grandpa paid for the real estate. Do you know what we found? Most people don't even have the records. Most people don't even know what grandpa paid. Most people don't have any idea, and they can't find out because it happened 30 or 40 or 50 years ago. We tried this. We tried what they are proposing. It was an administrative disaster, an administrative nightmare.

We will hear the other side saying that these assets have already been taxed. The fact is, an analysis has been done. The vast majority of these assets have never been taxed. Yet they say it is double-dipping. Most of these cases are assets that have never been taxed. I believe the proposal that——

Mr. KYL. Will the Senator yield for a question on that?

Mr. CONRAD. Yes.

Mr. KYL. I am curious about the source of the statement that the majority of assets has never been taxed.

Mr. CONRAD. Yes. I will get the Senator a copy of the analysis on that.

Mr. KYL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CONRAD. The hard reality is that we have to make choices. We ought to reform the estate tax. We ought to increase the amount of exemption. We should not wait for 2007 and 2008. We ought to do it now.

Under my proposal, we go to $3 million from $1 million today for an individual, $6 million for a couple. At the same time, it costs a lot less. That means we do protect Social Security. We do protect the financial structure of this Government. We are fiscally responsible.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Alabama need?

Mr. SESSIONS. Ten minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas for his leadership on this issue and for yielding me time.

One of the issues we need to recognize as we talk about a budget—and we have the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee here—is we do not have a budget. One was proposed in the Budget Committee by the Democratic members. It was brought up, voted on, and got zero votes. The reason is that there is not sufficient discipline to make tough choices in this body, and the budget that was proposed had no political support, did not balance, and did not make sense.

We are in trouble with spending. When the President proposes an $18 billion emergency spending bill and this Senate adds $14 billion more to it for special projects that I do not believe are necessary, and, in fact, I think the President's supplemental was generous, we are losing discipline on spending.

The reason we had a surplus from 1994 to 1998 is we had almost no increase in spending in this body. We kept our spending flat on discretionary spending. It resulted in tremendous gains in balancing the budget.

It is time for us to deal with this estate/death tax. In 2000, we voted to eliminate it. It phases out at the end of 10 years, in 2010. People do not like it. It is unfair. It disrupts the American economy. To have the Federal Government reach in at the time of death of a family member and take out 55 percent of what that family has accumulated is a confiscation. It is an absolute decimation of a family's life and savings.

I had an individual tell me about their grandfather. Everybody was home for Christmas. It was just after Ronald Reagan had pushed through a modification of the estate tax. It would have saved his family a little money. The grandfather was there at Christmas. The cancer was taking its toll on him. Every day, he asked what day it was. She told me: My grandfather died at 10 a.m. on January 1. His last act was to do what he could to keep the taxman from taking away what he had earned and preserve it for his family.

I think this is a big deal. It touches a lot of people. Some people say: Oh, it is huge revenue, we cannot afford it. It is only 1 percent of the total income into this Government at best. That is something we certainly can afford to eliminate.

No tax causes more gyrations, more lawyers, more accountants, CPAs, appraisers, and strategists to try to beat this tax than does the death tax.

In addition to that, the Federal Government spends more on trying to collect the tax than on any other tax. For the 1 percent we get, we are getting the heaviest cost on the economy, the heaviest cost on the Government to collect them. I think it is very unwise. It causes extraordinary stress on the elderly.

Sit down, as I have done as a practicing lawyer, and talk with a family about the tough decisions they may have to make. Do they want to create a trust? Do they want to advance gift money to children to try to reduce the impact of this tax? This is forcing the elderly to make decisions they ought not have to make. It upsets them, makes them nervous, and causes them to make uneconomic decisions that reduce oftentimes the productivity and efficiencies of their corporations and businesses.

It is, in my view, a huge nightmare to collect. Much of the dispute is in litigation over appraised values of properties. Many of these issues are just really a nightmare for the elderly.

Let me share with my colleagues briefly what I think is the most pernicious part of this tax. My good friend's proposal to raise the exemption to $3 million really will not touch it. These are the growing, vibrant, midsize, local, home-based companies that are doing well.

I know of a company that had 27 automobile parts stores. They built up from one. They had headquarters in Alabama. One of the members dies, and then what do they do? They meet, have a discussion, and the net result is that this locally owned company, competing with some of the biggest parts companies in America, sells out to Carquest. I have nothing against Carquest, but that is a national company, maybe even an international company in scope, moving millions and millions of dollars a year in parts. As a former parts person myself and a former equipment dealer, I have some empathy for them.

I will just say this: Carquest, as a major national company, a broadly held stock company, never pays the death tax. It is never impacted by a death tax. But a closely held corporation is savaged by the death tax.

It reminds me of a situation in which there are some big trees growing up. There are some big trees and there are some little trees growing. They are trying to compete with the big trees to get more sunlight and develop and expand and compete with the big trees, and somebody comes along with the clippers and clips the tops off them, making it impossible for them to compete.

If my colleagues want to know why in America today we see a collapse of local companies, why we see an unusual conglomeration of wealth in the big stock companies, the reason is they do not pay this tax. This is a tax that falls only on the small companies in a way that devastates them too often.

I am concerned about that situation. I ask you: Do GM, GE, DaimlerChrysler, Toyota, or Mitsubishi pay a death tax? No, they do not. But I can take you back to the small bank in my hometown, the small manufacturing company, or the small chain of auto parts stores. I can tell you about a young man who told me that he and his father and brother owned four motels in Alabama. They would like to see their business expand. He explained to me that he, his brother, and his father were paying $5,000 a month for a life insurance policy on their father's life so they could pay the estate tax in case he died. Otherwise, they would have to take the money out of their company—and they had no money to take out of the company; they were pouring their money into the company—they would be forced to sell off maybe to a Holiday Inn, maybe to a Ramada, or some big company that does not pay the death tax.

We need to quit nickel-and-diming this issue. We have voted to eliminate this despicable, unfair, abusive tax that eliminates and weakens competition in America. It brings in little revenue at extraordinary cost to the tax collector and to the American people who have to pay it. It is long overdue to get rid of it. Let's not back up now. Let's go forward. Let's not let those who want more money to spend, spend, spend, spend, and keep us from doing the right thing.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the time is controlled by the Senator from North Dakota. I wonder if the Senator will yield me time to talk about some of the statements I heard this afternoon.

Mr. CONRAD. I will be happy to do that. Maybe I will take a minute.

Mr. REID. Fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, we have heard a lot from the other side about spending running away.

If we examine the budget before us, all of the increase is in two areas: defense and homeland security. Both sides of the aisle have supported those increases. The President proposed major increases in defense spending after the attack on this country. Those of us on our side of the aisle immediately agreed. The President proposed major increases in homeland security. Those on our side of the aisle immediately agreed.

There are big increases in spending, but every part of that increase is in those two areas of defense and homeland security. That is where the big increases are occurring, and I think it is understandable why we have big increases in defense proposed by the President and agreed to by our side of the aisle. I think it is very easily understood why we have a big increase in homeland security proposed by the President and agreed to by our side of the aisle.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONRAD. Yes, I would be happy to yield.

Mr. REID. I have said publicly and, of course, privately that I think the Senator from North Dakota really has a grasp on numbers. The Senator is aware, is he not, that about a year ago at this time, it was approximately a $4.7 trillion surplus over 10 years? The Senator would agree now that that basically is gone; is not that right?

Mr. CONRAD. Yes. Actually, the Senator will recall, we were told a year ago that we were going to have $5.6 trillion of surpluses over the next decade. That is what we were told a year ago, January of 2001, $5.6 trillion of surpluses.

Now when we look at the President's budget proposal, plus the shortfall in revenue in this filing season, plus the stimulus bill that has been passed, there are no surpluses, none. Remember, about half of this money was Social Security money. In other words, $2.5 billion of this amount of surpluses is Social Security money. It is all being used for other purposes now.

When the Senator from Arizona says it does not matter about the estate tax and Social Security because estate tax money is not used for Social Security, the point he misses is when money is taken out of the revenue stream, and there already is not enough to meet the obligations and now even more money is taken, something has to give. What is the one place that is left to give?

Mr. REID. Social Security.

Mr. CONRAD. The Social Security trust fund. So he can say there is no connection, but there is a very direct connection. There is a very real connection. The only place there is any money is the Social Security trust fund. So if he takes a big chunk more of revenue, how is it going to get covered?

Mr. REID. Will the Senator answer another question?

Mr. CONRAD. I would be happy to.

Mr. REID. The tax cuts that were passed in this body also had some impact on the future financial security of this country. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. CONRAD. There is no question about it. If we look at, where did all the money go, here is where it went. Our friends on the other side like to say it all went to spending. No, no, no. Forty-two percent went to the tax cut. That is the biggest reason for the disappearance of the surplus. The second biggest reason is economic changes. That is the economic slowdown. That is the second biggest reason. The third biggest reason is spending, and virtually all of it is defense and homeland security.

The final reason was underestimations of the cost of Medicare and Medicaid. That is where the money went.

Mr. REID. I would like to ask the Senator another question or two. Is that appropriate?

Mr. CONRAD. Sure.

Mr. REID. We passed Friday, about 1 a.m., a supplemental appropriations bill. I have heard statements all day from the other side of the aisle about this supplemental appropriation and how it contains big spending. I direct the Senator's attention to a number of items. First, I ask the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Budget Committee, he realizes, does he not, that there was $14 billion in that bill for defense? Is the Senator aware of that?

Mr. CONRAD. That is correct. Of the $31 billion, $14 billion was for defense.

Mr. REID. That was requested by the President; is that true?

Mr. CONRAD. That is correct.

Mr. REID. The Senator is aware also that there was approximately $5.5 billion requested by the President for homeland security efforts; is that true?

Mr. CONRAD. That is correct.

Mr. REID. The Senator is also aware that Senator BYRD and Senator STEVENS held hearings over a period of 3 weeks that included seven Cabinet officers and scores of other witnesses to find out what was needed for homeland security for this next fiscal year. Is the Senator aware of that?

Mr. CONRAD. I am.

Mr. REID. After having done that on a bipartisan basis, unanimously out of the Committee on Appropriations, is the Senator aware that figure was increased by about $3 billion?

Mr. CONRAD. That is correct.

Mr. REID. Is it not true, I say to my friend, that of those moneys that were increased, there was a billion for first responder programs? I say to my friend, I heard on public radio this morning a long piece on how State and local government is being killed financially because of the responsibilities they have for providing security for their people, and these are responsibilities they believe that the Federal Government should bear. They gave an example of a place in Florida. Tomorrow I think they said they are going to go to Orange County, CA, and indicate how these entities are being decimated financially as a result of their requirements, these unfunded mandates that we have passed on to them. Is the Senator aware of that?

Mr. CONRAD. I am. I say to my colleague, I looked at the increases because, frankly, there were parts of that bill that I did not support. I voted against a number of the provisions in that bill. If one is fair and objective about what was offered, where did the increases occur?

According to the Congressional Budget Office, the difference between the Senate-passed bill and the House-passed bill is $1.4 billion, not the $10 billion that is being discussed on the other side; $1.4 billion of differences between the House bill and the Senate bill when scored consistently by the Congressional Budget Office. Where were the differences? First responders, $600 million more in the Senate bill; nuclear facilities, $300 million more to protect our nuclear facilities; port security, $700 million more.

If anybody has been reading the newspapers, they know there is a tremendous vulnerability of the United States to a so-called "dirty" bomb that would make this Capital uninhabitable for 400 years. I do not think it is unreasonable to say we are going to protect the nuclear facilities where that fissile material might come from, that we are going to protect the ports of America where those threats could come in to America.

Another $250 million was added for airport security to protect against these materials coming into the airports of the country in the holds of planes.

I say to my colleagues, that is spending that was designed to protect America.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator also acknowledge that there has been in this bill that we passed in the Senate last Friday morning $387 billion for bioterrorism, including to improve lab capacity at our Centers for Disease Control and the National Institutes of Health? Does the Senator from North Dakota acknowledge the importance of studying bioterrorism after the anthrax that closed down a major office building for 3 months in the Senate?

Mr. CONRAD. It not only closed down a major office building in the Senate but closed down post offices and closed down businesses.

Mr. REID. And killed people.

Mr. CONRAD. Killed people.

Now that we know a significant part of the planning by the al-Qaida network is bioterrorism, we know that a significant part of the planning of the al-Qaida network is a "dirty" nuclear device to be dropped on this Nation's Capital, we cannot choose to turn our backs and not worry about defending the country.

Our first obligation as United States Senators is to defend this Nation.

Mr. REID. Would the Senator acknowledge there is $200 million in this bill that the President requested based on hearings held by Senators BYRD and STEVENS for food safety, including food inspectors, laboratories, protections against animal and plant disease, and also to assess risks to rural water systems; and also aware there is $154 million for cyber-security, there is also $100 million for the Environmental Protection Agency to look at assessments of water system security?

We have people quibbling, and I say "quibbling" because I cannot find another word to describe what they are talking about this afternoon. The Senator has shown in graphic form billions of dollars taken away from the American people and given to a very small percentage of the people. Less than 1 percent of the American taxpayers, 42 percent, is gone because of that; is that right?

Mr. CONRAD. Yes.

Mr. REID. I don't mean to denigrate, but I cannot come up with another word other than "quibbling." We are talking about billions of dollars that is gone—like that—and here we are talking about programs that Senators BYRD and STEVENS worked on for weeks, that passed in the Senate without any problem at all because it was good for homeland security, good for the people of my State, good for the people of your State, and as I heard on Public Radio this morning, good for the people of Florida and even Orange County, CA, which has been devastated. I might mention, Orange County, CA, is a very rich county, but they have been devastated by virtually unfunded mandates that we passed on them since September 11.

Mr. CONRAD. I ask my colleague, are there times when money is spent inappropriately? Absolutely. Do we need to restrain spending? Absolutely.

Under the budget proposal I made to my colleagues, we would take spending to the lowest level since 1966. I applaud the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Arizona for saying we have to restrain spending. There is no way out of this hole that has been dug except to look at both sides of the equation—spending and revenue.

To eliminate the estate tax that costs $99 billion under their proposal, when instead we could reform the estate tax and increase the exemption to $3 million for an individual, $6 million for a couple, at a cost of one-eighth as much, a cost of $12.5 billion instead of $99 billion, makes no earthly sense to me. I hope we think carefully about these votes and what it means for the financial future of the country.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CONRAD. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-one and a half minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. I am happy to yield to the Senator from West Virginia, 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. President, I understand there is a little bit of grousing and gnashing of teeth concerning the moneys that were appropriated for homeland security in the supplemental appropriations bill last week. Let us stop, look, and listen.

In the last several hours, the threats against this Nation from terrorist attack once again were made evident with the arrest of an American citizen who apparently has been working with the "al-Qaida" terrorist network, plotting an attack on the nation's capital.

Once again, our eyes have been opened to the fact that terrorists live among us. The threats are real. The danger is present. We should not continue to delay actions that will fund immediate steps to protect American lives from attack.

Soon, the supplemental bill, which is being criticized by some today, will be in conference. I will fight hard for the $8.3 billion homeland security package that this Senate overwhelmingly approved last week. I hope that President Bush will match his rhetoric on homeland security with support for a funding package that meets so many of the critical security shortfalls in this country.

The announcement about yesterday's arrest only amplifies the concerns raised by administration officials within the past few weeks. The Vice President warned that a strike is "almost certain." Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld has stated that it is inevitable that terrorists will acquire weapons of mass destruction. Secretary of State Colin Powell has warned that "terrorists are trying every way they can" to get nuclear, chemical or biological weapons. And Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge said, "While we prepare for another terrorist attack, we need to understand that it is not a question of if, but a question of when."

Clearly, we know that the threat exists. We know that terrorists plan to strike. We do not know where or how or when, but we know that they will strike again. The question remains, will we be prepared?

Last week, the Senate took steps to address the many gaps in our homeland security network. By a vote of 71 to 22, the Senate voted very clearly to provide critical resources to protect American lives and to try to prevent future tragedies like the one we witnessed last September. Unfortunately, despite all of its rhetoric that homeland security is a top priority, the administration continues to oppose this critical legislation. In fact, the administration has gone so far as to threaten to veto the bill.

The President today travels to a water treatment plant in Kansas City, MO, to showcase a piece of his proposed Department of Homeland Security. This piece would create a threat analysis unit, envisioned as part of Mr. Bush's proposed intelligence-analyzing division, that would study the vulnerabilities of critical infrastructure such as water, road, and financial systems.

The supplemental bill approved by the Senate and currently opposed by the Bush Administration would put us several steps ahead on this threat assessment.

During Senate Appropriations Committee hearings over the last several weeks, Senators learned that more than $400 million is needed for local governments to conduct vulnerability assessments for our water systems. The supplemental bill includes $125 million for cities to assess the vulnerabilities of their water systems and for vulnerability assessments and security improvements to protect rural water systems. The administration did not request funding to help secure our drinking water systems, and it is opposing the Senate-passed supplemental bill that does make appropriations for our drinking water.

This spring, the Department of Energy sent the Office of Management and Budget a request for additional funds to secure America's nuclear weapons complex and labs, but the request was turned down. Now the administration has lauded its arrest of one man linked to a "dirty bomb" plot. But instead of supporting funds to better secure our nuclear labs and material, the administration is opposing the Senate supplemental bill that contains $200 million for that very purpose.

While in Kansas City today, the President is also expected to trumpet his plans to address vulnerabilities within the nation's financial systems. A cyber attack is a real possibility. As Senator BENNETT has pointed out, "In the cyber-age, many of the attitudes we have had about warfare, about vulnerability, about opportunity have to be thought through entirely differently." Instead of supporting our efforts to address this threat, the President is opposing the Senate-passed supplemental bill that includes $154 million for cybersecurity to help combat the threat to Federal and private information systems.

Today, the President will talk about his support for local communities in the overall homeland security effort. A major part of that local effort is the actions of first responders, namely, local police officers, firefighters, emergency medical teams. The Federal Emergency Management Agency received $3 billion worth of applications from local firefighters for new equipment and training, but FEMA only had $360 million to meet the request. The administration did not ask for any additional funds in its supplemental bill. But the Senate-passed legislation last week does include $300 million to continue to meet this massive gap in our homeland security network.

Last week, the President announced a massive governmental reorganization to respond to terrorist threats. I support the concept of a Department of Homeland Security, as do most Members of this Congress, I believe, but there are many details to be worked out and many questions to be answered. We should not wait to address the gaps in our Nation's defenses while this new department is crafted. Terrorists will not swear off further violence until a new department is up and running. We should not delay our efforts to thwart that attack. The appropriations bill the Senate passed last week with a huge margin will do just that.

It is time for the administration's rhetoric on homeland security to be matched by action. It is time for the administration to recognize that simply talking about homeland security will not save lives. It is time for the administration to support investments in homeland security, to support the Senate's work to save lives, and to help fill the gaps that currently exist in our Nation's homeland security network. The administration should support the supplemental appropriations bill passed by the Senate last week, and I hope the President will speak to that end.

I was down at the White House this morning, and I urged the President to support the supplemental appropriations bill that the Senate passed last week. This bill will go a long way toward matching the rhetoric by the administration.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I say to my colleague, Senator CONRAD was going to yield me 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. I can do it either way. I was going to speak, but if the Senator has a time constraint, I am happy to step aside for 10 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. If my colleague would be willing to do so, that would help me.

Mr. GRAMM. I will be glad to do so. Let my colleague speak.

Mr. REID. How much time does the Senator from Minnesota desire?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Ten minutes. I will take more time tomorrow.

Mr. REID. Senator CONRAD has how much time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There remain 22.5 minutes.

Mr. REID. On behalf of Senator CONRAD, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I strongly oppose the full repeal of the estate tax for multimillionaires and billionaires. It is unfair, and it is unaffordable. Let's repeal it for small businesses. Let's repeal it for family farmers. We all agree on that. Let's go with the Conrad formula of $3 million individual, $6 million a couple, up to $7 million, but let's retain some modicum of fiscal sanity before we give away nearly $1 trillion in tax cuts to a handful of the ultrarich. That is what this is.

The timing could not be more ironic. We now immediately follow a vote to increase the Federal debt limit by $450 billion. That was to borrow another $450 billion, which is only enough credit to last until next March.

Many of my colleagues voted for the tax cuts last year but they opposed increasing the debt limit; that is to say, in the words of the old Yiddish proverb, dancing at two weddings at the same time, although I don't think you should be able to do so.

It is now clear that the claims that have been made by the White House, by the President, and by too many Senators and Representatives, that we can have massive tax cuts for the wealthy—Robin Hood in reverse—with most of the breaks going to the top 1 percent, pay down the debt, and invest in critical public priorities, were completely false.

Of course, there is plenty of that to go around. Colleagues were out here advocating nearly a $1 trillion tax cut for billionaires less than a week after there was so much heartburn on the Senate floor over an extra $1 billion for homeland security. Where did the fiscal conservatives go? They will spend $1 trillion to protect some wealthy kid's inheritance, but they will not spend $1 billion to protect our cities and towns from terrorists.

Spend $1 trillion to protect some wealthy kid's inheritance but not $400 million for veterans' health care, with so many veterans falling between the cracks.

Give away almost $1 trillion over the next 20 years, erode the revenue base—it is fine to do it for billionaires and multimillionaires, but we don't have enough money for education, not for smaller class size, not to recruit and retain good teachers, not to have good, affordable prescription drugs, not to do something about deplorable conditions in nursing homes, not to help elderly people stay at home, live at home in as near normal circumstances as possible with dignity, not to expand health care coverage. We will not have any of the money to do that.

Full repeal of the estate tax would cost $104 billion over the next 10 years, literally to protect a few thousand ultrawealthy families. Even worse, from 2013 to 2020 it is going to cost the taxpayers over $800 billion to provide this "relief." This means that the full cost of this effort to have full repeal of the estate tax over 20 years is nearly $1 trillion.

Nationally, only 1.6 percent of all estates were made up with significant small business assets and only 1.4 percent had significant farm assets. This means that virtually all the estate tax is paid by extremely wealthy people who do not own farms or small businesses. The Conrad amendment really targets this.

In contrast, many rely on Social Security. Over 740,000 Minnesotans currently receive Social Security. Make no bones about it, what we are going to be doing here is not only not providing the investment in education or health care or affordable housing, but in addition we are just going to basically be taking it out of the Social Security trust fund. That is what this is all about.

For helping multibillionaires and billionaires, refusing to target this—which is what the Conrad amendment does—refusing to exclude small businesses and family farms that are handed from family to family—which is exactly what the Dorgan amendment does—instead, we have this effort to erode the revenue base $1 trillion over 20 years, most of the benefits going to the wealthiest Americans. And at the same time, we will not even be able to live up to our commitment in Social Security.

I believe this is really a proposal which defies common sense. If we want to do it the right way, we cap the estate tax exemption at a reasonable level. That is what the Conrad amendment does. If we want to do it the right way, we exempt, as I said before, family farms and family-owned businesses. If we want to do it the right way, we will have some balance.

I finish on this note. I do not fault my colleagues because I think for many of them, this is their position. If you believe that when it comes to the most pressing issues of people's lives—be it to make sure Social Security benefits are there, to make sure we adequately fund Medicare reimbursement for our hospitals and nursing homes and home health care providers, to make sure people can afford prescription drugs, to make sure we live up to our commitment to get the dollars back to our schools and our school districts, our teachers, our children, our young people from prekindergarten through higher education, to make sure something is done about the lack of affordable housing, to make sure we can provide some help for people who have no health care coverage, to make sure we can provide some help for small businesses that can't afford health care costs—if you believe, when it comes to those pressing issues, there is nothing the Government can or should do—and I believe that in some ways that is the ideological position some of my colleagues take—then eliminating the estate tax, not targeting it, is the perfect way to go.

It is win-win. You help the millionaires and the multimillionaires and the billionaires, you erode the revenue base, and you make it impossible for the Senate and the House of Representatives and the Federal Government to play a positive role in helping people. You make it impossible for the Federal Government to play a positive role in dealing with some of the most pressing issues of the lives of people we represent.

That is what this estate tax cut does. That is what this proposal to completely eliminate the estate tax accomplishes.

In one broad stroke of public policy, you have Robin Hood in extreme reverse with the benefits going to the wealthiest Americans, and at the same time you make it impossible for us to make the investments in health care, in education, in affordable housing, in Social Security, and in Medicare.

From the point of view of some of my colleagues, it is win-win. From my point of view, it is lose-lose.

I hope our colleagues will support the Conrad amendment as at least a commonsense, reasonable alternative.

I am not sure my colleague from Texas fully agrees with my statement, but I appreciate his graciousness.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I first wish to say something that I consider to be positive about our colleague from Minnesota. There are many people who want to take the repeal of the death tax back, but they do not want to own up to why they want to do it. They want to do it because they want to spend the money. The one thing I have always admired about the Senator from Minnesota is that he does not dilute his liberalism with the alloy of hypocrisy. He says exactly what he believes. I think in doing so he not only is true to his conscience but he does the Senate a service by defining exactly what all of this is about.

I wish to yield myself 20 minutes of the remaining 50 minutes we have.

Let me begin by saying that I think I am a good person to be a leader on this issue in the sense that the only thing I have ever been bequeathed in my life is that my grandmomma's brother, my great-uncle Bill—who was a great checkers player and I guess in the minds of the world since he worked in a cotton mill he may not have been a very important person, but he was an important person to me—but he bequeathed to me a cardboard suitcase full of yellow sports clips from the 1950s. I have often thought that had it been baseball cards I would be a rich man today. So I will never pay a death tax. I hope someday my children and grandchildren will have enough wealth that it would be an issue if we don't repeal it. But I am against the death tax because it is profoundly wrong.

I know it is easy to envy what another family achieves. But how can it be right? I am not talking about budgets, I am not talking about dollars, I am talking about right and wrong. People may work a lifetime, they scrimp, they save, they sacrifice, they plow back into their business, they work 12 and 14 hours a day, they accumulate, they build, and they build America while they are building. How can it be right simply because we are greedy and we want their money to make their children sell off the fruits of their life's work to give the Government a 55-percent share of everything they have accumulated during their lifetime simply because they have been successful?

It is a question of right and wrong. I will say about the constituents of my State—I can't speak for any other State in the Union—but in my State when I am talking about this issue—whether I am talking to farmhands, or railroad retirees, or rich people in North Dallas—when I talk about it being wrong to make a man or a woman sell off the life's work of their parents to give the Government a double taxation, people stand up and applaud because they are against it. They are flat against it because it is wrong and because it is un-American. It is un-American to do that. By doing it, we prevent accumulation.

I would like to refer to two thick studies. I would put them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, except it would cost a lot of money. So let me refer to them so if people want them they can get them off the Internet. I will save probably $25,000 by not putting these in the RECORD.

There was a study by the Joint Economic Committee, entitled "The Economics Of The Estate Tax." It was published in December of 1998 by the Joint Economic Committee.

All of their analyses and numbers boil down to the conclusion that the death tax has reduced by $500 billion the capital stock and the total investment that the Nation has made in job creation. They conclude that we are not raising net revenues by forcing people to destroy small businesses, destroy family farms, and to tear up the bequeath of Americans who have been successful. They argue that it destroys capital and that actually we are not collecting net revenue. I commend this to my colleagues.

The second study is a private study that was done by the Institute for Policy Innovation, entitled "The Case For Burying The Estate Tax."

They conclude that there are costs to collecting the estate tax. There is a decline in economic efficiency as people sell off their business because they do not want their children to have to deal with the estate tax problem. People buy insurance with money they could be investing in their business, and they do that to try to avoid the estate tax. When you look at all those costs, the Institute for Policy Innovation concludes that on net we are not even collecting any taxes with the death tax.

Finally, even if you accept the IRS data as net data—in other words, that we are really losing revenue—when you take into account what it costs to collect the tax, what people spend trying to avoid it, and how it hurts the economy, contrary to all of the debate you have heard from the Democrat side of the aisle, we collected less than one cent out of every dollar of taxes collected in America last year from the death tax.

Under the best of circumstances, we are not collecting very much money. Under more likely scenarios, we are not netting any money from the tax.

This policy of death tax is driven by collective greed. It is not driven by economics. It makes no sense to make people sell off their business, or destroy their farm, or tear up their life's work. And it hurts the economy to do it. But we continue to do it because of this collective envy that somehow there is something wrong about people accumulating.

Let me take the richest man in the world, Bill Gates. They say he is worth $46 billion. But because Bill Gates has $46 billion, I am richer. He changed the life of everybody on this planet with what he did in terms of information technology and the management of data. He created 10 or 100 times that wealth from which we have all benefitted. He is giving over 90 percent of it away.

You might say that is a lot of money. Many of our colleagues will say, let us take it, we can spend it. But what moral right do we have to take it? He has already paid taxes on every dollar of it. He is the largest taxpayer in the world. I am not doing this for Bill Gates, but he is the extreme example.

The point is that this is not collecting very much money. Interestingly enough, one of the great paradoxes is the substitute that has been offered by Senator CONRAD raises the deduction immediately to $3 million over the next 5 years and it would cost $20 billion.

The way we phase out the repeal, our repeal over the next 5 years only costs $6.8 billion, and the real cost comes in the 10th year. The incredible paradox is the substitute that is being offered takes money out of the Treasury exactly when we don't have it, and it doesn't take money out in 2010 when we are going to have a surplus, according to the estimates of the Congressional Budget Office projection I have in front of me, of $653 billion.

In other words, in trying to prevent us from making the repeal of the death tax permanent, the Senator from North Dakota offers a substitute that actually drives the deficit up in the next 5 years, whereas by phasing out the death tax, the real large cost of our phaseout does not occur until a year where we have about $600 billion of surplus. Why not give it back?

The point is, we voted to repeal the death tax. We all celebrated it. We talked about it all over the country. Now we have a quirk in the budget where it comes back in 10 years. Did we mean to repeal it or didn't we? I believe we did. I believe we should.

The second line of defense in all this is: But we don't have the money. We just don't have the money. We want to make the death tax repeal permanent, but we don't have the money.

The only point I make, and I don't want to be unkind to anybody, but why is this argument about not having money never made when we are spending money? Why is it only made when we are letting people keep more of what they earn?

I want to give you five examples. Whether it was good or whether it was bad—and my guess is some of it was good and some of it wasn't good—last Thursday we spent $14 billion more than the President requested on nonemergency items. That is four times the amount it would cost over the next 2 years to make the death tax repeal permanent. So if last Thursday we had enough money to spend $14 billion that the President did not request as an emergency, how come we don't have enough money to make the death tax permanent today?

On the farm bill, I voted against the farm bill because I thought it was completely larded. I thought it was abusive in its spending. But how come we had enough money to spend next year on the farm bill that is seven times as much as it would cost next year to make the death tax repeal permanent? We had seven times as much money to spend 3 months ago when we passed that bill, but we don't have one-seventh that amount to be sure that people don't have to sell their farm when their dad dies?

It is a matter of priorities. On the energy bill, we had more new tax cuts in that bill for the next year than it would cost to repeal the death tax.

The trade bill contains new entitlements, and we had several times as much new spending in that bill that we passed last month as would be required to pay for repealing the death tax.

In railroad retirement, we had 15 times as much in the first year as it would take to fund repealing the death tax.

And finally, in the stimulus bill, in the amount we spent above the President's request, we could have funded repeal of the death tax over twice over.

Here is my point: I am not saying that every one of these things was terrible and there weren't good things in them. I am just saying, here are five examples where we spent multiples of the amount of money that would be required this year for us to repeal the death tax. Nobody who today is saying we just don't have the money said that on any one of those five things I mentioned. I said it, I believe, on each and every one of them.

The point is, the people who are saying we don't have enough money to make the repeal of the death tax permanent are the same people who voted to spend all this money.

A final point on this issue: The Democrat budget that we voted on last week on the floor and not one Member of the Senate voted for—I guess every Democrat thought it didn't spend enough and every Republican thought it spent too much, but nobody voted for it—increased spending on the discretionary account. I am not talking about national security items. I am not talking about defense. I am talking about $106 billion more than the President requested. That was more than enough to have funded the repeal of the death tax. The same people who thought we needed that $106 billion of spending now say we can't afford to repeal the death tax.

It is a matter of priorities. Many of our colleagues can never afford to let working people keep more of what they earn, but they can always afford to spend the money. That is what this debate is about.

It really boils down to this: First, we said we would repeal the death tax. It turns out it is coming back in 10 years. Should we make it permanent or not? Is it not wrong to force people to destroy the life work of their parents to give the Government 55 cents out of every dollar they have ever earned and accumulated even though they paid taxes on every penny of it?

Second, are these programs that we want to spend money on so valuable that it is worth tearing up family farms and family businesses and the life's work of our people to pay for it? I don't think so.

Finally, we have good, solid studies, including by our own Joint Economic Committee, that suggest we are not even collecting money on these taxes because they make the economy less efficient.

So this is really not even about money. This is about collective greed in that we want to redistribute wealth when people die. We don't believe death ought to be a taxable event. That is what it boils down to.

Let me sum up, and then I will yield the floor. What is the No. 1 reason that 70 percent of all family businesses do not survive into the second generation? Seventy percent of all small businesses that somebody founded do not survive into a successful operation by their children. Why? According to the National Federation of Independent Business, it is the death tax.

Eighty-seven percent of all small businesses fail before they get to the third generation of the family member who started them. Why? The NFIB says the No. 1 reason is the death tax.

And finally, 60 percent of all small business owners report that they would create new jobs over the coming year if estate taxes were eliminated. We have businesses that are buying great big insurance policies so their children won't have to sell the business. That money could be going into the business instead of being wasted economically. If you don't want to destroy small businesses, repeal the death tax.

My second point: Under the death tax, you are taxed once, you die, and then you are taxed again. Why is it right that you earn a dollar; the Government takes 40 cents out of the dollar; you plow what is left of the aftertax dollar back into your business or your farm; you die; and your children have to sell the business or farm to pay a tax on the 60 cents that you got to keep out of the original dollar? How is that right? It is not right.

No. 3, this is simple, it is clever, but it is just the truth, too. It is just the pitiful truth. No one should have to visit the undertaker and the IRS on the same day. It is just not right. So often we debate these things over numbers and budgets and all these other things when this is an issue about right and wrong. This tax is wrong.

Finally, repealing the death tax would create jobs.

According to an article in the Wall Street Journal, "The True Cost of Dying," on July 28, 1999, they estimate that repealing the death tax would create 200,000 jobs. Now, it is true that some of our colleagues say if we take the tax cut back and we make people sell their farm or their business and give us 55 percent of its value, we can spend it on programs. But are those programs worth 200,000 jobs? I don't think so.

So we have before us a proposal that says let's repeal the death tax, but only for a few people. Let's raise the cost now when we have a deficit, but let's not eliminate the tax when we can afford it and when we have a huge surplus. It makes no sense. The plain truth is that a great bulk of the cost of making this tax cut permanent occurs in the year it expires, which is 2010, and by the most recent Congressional Budget Office projections our elimination of the death tax will occur in a year when we will have a surplus of $653 billion. And $335 billion of that will not belong to Social Security.

Why should we not repeal the death tax? Is there anything we can spend that money for that would be more valuable? I don't think so. I hope my colleagues will agree.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. KYL. Madam President, I appreciate the fine explanation of my colleague from Texas. He has been an advocate of the repeal of the death tax for a long time. I am pleased to join with him in this amendment and to be able to say that we have finally been able to bring before the Senate the permanent repeal of the death tax.

I want to make several points. I see that the Senator from Oklahoma is here. Was he intending to make a point at this time?

Mr. NICKLES. I have about 7 or 8 minutes.

Mr. KYL. I will go ahead. Will the Chair let me know when I have spoken for 12 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. KYL. I appreciate that. The first point the Senator from Texas made was that the death tax is bad tax policy. Let me explain a little bit more of what we mean by that. The Tax Code generally taxes you for voluntary conduct. If you sell property, you know there is going to be a capital gains tax on that. If you work, you know you are going to earn income and you are going to be taxed on that. People make decisions based upon tax consequences. But there are a few situations in our Tax Code that are treated as involuntary conversions.

If the Government condemns your property and pays you money for that, you don't want that money; you want your property. The Government recognizes that as an involuntary action on your part, so you don't pay ordinary income at that time on that money. If your house burns down and you collect money from an insurance policy, you didn't intend for that to happen. The Government doesn't treat those insurance proceeds to you as ordinary income. It is taxed in a different way. The same thing is what we are proposing to do with the estate tax. Nobody intends for your father, or whoever it might be, to die. He certainly doesn't. The money that you may get as a result of that is coming to you involuntarily. You didn't take some action in order for it to occur. So that money coming to you should be treated in a different way.

The way that it is treated under the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is to take 50 percent of the amount over $3 million. In other words, there is a $3 million exemption and, after that, every other dollar is taxed at 50 percent. If it is over $10 million, it is at 55 percent.

Now, that is bad tax policy. What we say instead is that the tax is not due on the date of death. Death is not a taxable event. Instead, the money passes to the heirs and, at that point, if they sell the property, there is a taxable event. You pay the capital gains on that property. In fact, the basis for the capital gain is the original basis on when the property was purchased by the decedent, not the value at the time of death. So, in effect, we are replacing one tax with another tax. Much of the revenue is not lost to the Treasury as a result. But at least as to the decision to pay Uncle Sam, the money comes from the voluntary act of people who inherited the property and who are willing to pay the capital gains tax if they sell the property, or part of it.

But what you don't have to do, as the Senator from Texas said, is visit the IRS the same day you visit the mortuary. That is wrong. That is why over 60 percent of the American people believe this is an unfair tax.

It is interesting that three-fourths of the people surveyed who say it is an unfair tax say they would favor its repeal, even though they don't believe that repeal would have any effect on them because they would not be receiving any of that money, or paying it, as an heir. So it is an unfair tax. As a matter of fact, the Senate agreed that it was unfair. We repealed it. A majority of Senators voted to repeal the estate tax.

Now, under the procedures under which that was done, no action that we took could last longer than 10 years. So the irony is after 10 years, none of our tax relief exists; it evaporates and we go back to where we were in 2001. Did we intend that? When we told our constituents we reduced the marriage penalty and reduced their individual income-tax rate and repealed the estate tax, were we kidding or did we really mean it? We will find out tomorrow.

If we were just kidding, then we will defeat the Gramm-Kyl amendment, or adopt some other proposal. If we meant what we said, saying we meant to repeal it, to cast the vote to do that, and since that sunsets after 10 years, we are going to permanently repeal it with our vote today, you will support the Gramm-Kyl amendment.

Some say this doesn't affect many people. The fact is that it doesn't just affect the rich. The descendant—the rich person—died. He cannot be affected; he is gone. Most of the people who inherit the money are not rich, and certainly the employees of their companies or the farms are not rich. So most of the people who are affected by the death tax are not wealthy at all.

The question is, Do you want to take half of what they are going to get from the person who worked so hard during his or her life to provide it to them? According to the Treasury Department, 45,000 families paid some level of estate tax in 1999. That is families. If it is a family of four, multiply that by 4 to see the number of people who are immediately affected, and then you can add to that the people indirectly affected. What is not included in the statistics is twice as many people sell their business or their farms. Many more people are adversely impacted when jobs in the community are lost when a family-owned business is sold to pay the tax.

In addition, more than 2 percent of Americans bear the aggregate costs of this tax—fees to lawyers and accountants and life insurance agents. As a matter of fact, it costs just about exactly as much for the people who pay the lawyers and insurance agents and the accountants to avoid the total consequence of the tax as the Federal Government collects from those who actually end up paying. So it ends up being a double tax on Americans. Half pay the tax to Uncle Sam and the other half pay the lawyers. I don't know which is worse.

The death tax not only impacts more than 2 percent of Americans, it burdens family-owned businesses under $100 million in value. According to the IRS, in 1999, 116,500 estate tax returns were filed; 60,700 of these returns were filed by estates with values of less than a million dollars. Estates valued between $1 million and $5 million filed 50,600 returns. There were 5,200 estates filed of more than 5 million. So even combined, the millionaires filing for the tax do not exceed the nonmillionaires.

The bottom line is that Americans recognize it is an unfair tax. It affects a lot more people than the person who had wealth when he died. The Senate recognized the same thing when it adopted the repeal of this tax.

Madam President, I was a bit surprised by the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

I know a lot of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle are opposed to permanent repeal of the estate tax. I thought what they would do was offer a fairly generous package that would be tempting for our colleagues to vote for in lieu of the real repeal, which is the Gramm-Kyl repeal. As it turns out, that was not done. It is a very straightforward proposal which is not generous at all. As a matter of fact, it is worse—it is worse—than the status quo. People would be better off under the existing law, even without the ultimate repeal, than they would be taking the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

It is interesting that while he is concerned about the cost of repeal in the first 5 years, for which we have figures, the repeal of the proposal before us of the Senator from North Dakota would be about $22 billion versus $9 billion for our proposal at a time when we are in a deficit situation, as the Senator from Texas noted.

The only way this is made up is that in return for that, we immediately go from a reduced rate of taxes under our bill and under the status quo to a 50-percent rate under the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. The exemption amount is $3 million. The exemption under ours by the year 2009 is $3.5 million and, of course, in the final year, there is no need for an exemption from the estate tax because the estate tax is repealed.

Under the substitution of the capital gains tax for the estate tax in the Gramm-Kyl proposal, we retain a $5.6 million equivalent to an exemption so that nobody will pay a capital gains tax who would not have paid an estate tax. People are made whole, in other words.

Under no scenario would you be better off under the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. You would be much better off under the amendment Senator GRAMM and I have proposed.

Let me make one other point. When we talk about the cost of this proposal, it is always a bit frustrating for me because we are talking about lost revenues to the Federal Treasury. To me, that is not a cost; that is an opportunity for Americans to keep more of their own money.

What we know from tax policy generally is if you reduce people's taxes, you improve the status of the economy. One thing we forget when we talk about the alleged cost of the repeal of the estate tax is the positive effect that has on the economy. A study conducted by Alan Sinai shows the GDP of our country could increase a total of $150 billion over 10 years and job growth could increase 165,000 per year with repeal. The increase in household savings would be between $800 and $3,000 annually. So the impact on families and on the GDP would be significant from a repeal of the estate tax.

A Joint Economic Committee study estimates the existence of the tax has reduced the Nation's pool of savings by $497 billion. An expert in this area testified before our Finance Committee and said immediate repeal of the death tax would result in a $40 billion economic stimulus.

If you really want to stimulate the economy, if you really want to create more jobs, if you want to enhance the GDP and if you want to enhance personal savings and personal income, then repeal the tax.

It is true that the Federal Government is a little worse off if we repeal the tax. It does not take in quite as much money. But American families have a lot left, and the American economy is a lot healthier as a result.

What happens when the economy grows? We all know that tax collections by the Government actually increase when the economy grows. We do not have an exact study on what Federal revenue increases would be, but we know they would be significant.

A final point: There is always the bottom line argument: when you cannot scare people any other way, say that Social Security might be affected.

There is zero effect; there can be no effect on Social Security by repeal of the death tax. The death tax has nothing to do with Social Security. The death tax goes to the general revenues. It is about 1 percent, 1.5 percent of general revenues. It has no impact on Social Security. It pays none of the Social Security benefits.

Today, in the year 2002, we will be taking in about $624 billion in Social Security, and the payments to Social Security recipients are about $465 billion, so we have about a $175 billion surplus in Social Security funds.

No Social Security recipient could be affected by repeal of the death tax. Let's at least understand that and not scare people by suggesting there is an adverse impact on Social Security.

We have more points. I reserve the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, first, I compliment my friends, Senator KYL and Senator GRAMM, for their leadership in trying to eliminate one of the most unfair taxes in U.S. history. We have a chance to do it. We have two proposals that are before us. One is by Senator GRAMM and Senator KYL, of which I am a cosponsor, to repeal the death tax so there will not be a taxable event on somebody's death. Now there will be a taxable event when the property is sold, also known as a capital gains tax. That is 20 percent. That ought to be enough.

We are trying to make permanent the repeal in the year 2010. Let's make that permanent. That is our objective. Under that scenario, if there is property in an estate—let's say it is a business, a manufacturing company, maybe it is a farm or ranch, maybe it is a restaurant in downtown Washington, DC. That restaurant may sell for $5 million. Maybe it is a second or third generation restaurant, Mortons, and it is worth several million dollars. If the son or daughter takes over that business and they do not sell it, there is not a taxable event. But if they decide it is too much of a hassle and they do not want to continue the operation and they sell it, then there is a taxable event. It will be taxed as capital gains at 20 percent instead of under Senator CONRAD's proposal of 55 percent.

I probably shocked somebody when I said 55 percent. I read Senator CONRAD's proposal as 50 percent. He has an exemption of $3 million, and in a few years $3.5 million, but above that is taxable at 50 percent. If you have an estate between $10 million and $17 million, there is another 5 percent kicker, and so the Federal Government will get 55 percent.

Why in the world would the Federal Government be entitled to take over half of somebody's property for which they worked their entire lives? Should the Federal Government come in and take half or over half? That is what is in the Conrad proposal.

We have two competing proposals. What will the impact be? Look at the businesses in Washington, Oregon, or Maine. We can all think of very successful people who have built businesses and have employed a lot of people. A lot of those are worth more than $3.5 million. Senator CONRAD's proposal says we want half of the property's worth when somebody passes away. I happen to think that is absolutely wrong. Whether the value of that business is $3 million or $100 million, if somebody wants to continue operating that business, why should the Government come in and say: No, stop, we want half; somebody died; stop; we want the Federal Government to come in and take half? That is what Senator CONRAD's proposal is. I object to that.

I learned the hard way. My grandfather started a business. My dad built it up. He died when he was pretty young, and the Government came in and said: Stop, we want half. We fought the Government for 7 years. Frankly, the business was a small, family-held business, and Uncle Sam said: We want half of it. We objected to that and we fought them for years. We ended up settling. They ended up getting a lot more than they should have.

The Government's purpose and function should be to protect our property, not confiscate it. If one thinks about it, under the Conrad proposal, if they get half—and let's say it is over $3 million.—somebody passes away this year, and then in the next generation somebody else passes away 20 years later, and they get half again. What a disincentive to grow, build, and expand.

There are countless generations across the country trying to grow, build and expand by employing more people and creating more products. I think of a company in Perry, Oklahoma called Ditch Witch. They manufacture trench makers. These machines are used to lay cable, phone lines, pipelines, help build roads, among many other uses. Perry, OK, has a population probably of 12,000 people, of which Ditch Witch employs a couple thousand. It is a great little family-owned business. Why should the Government come in and say: Stop, the proprietor passed away; we want half of it? What about those thousands of jobs?

Look at another company called Bama Pies. They make pies in Tulsa, OK. They make millions of pies, including all the pies for McDonald's. They employ hundreds, if not thousands, of people. It is a closely held business.

Why should the Government come in and take half because the entrepreneur who built that business happens to pass away and the value of the business is in the millions? I do not think they should.

That is what we are talking about. Should the Government come in and say, oh, well, you have been relatively successful, and because your estate is in the upper maybe 1 percent or 2 percent, it is okay if we sock it to you? What is right about that? What is fair about it? Where are the jobs that are in that kind of an ordeal? We think the Government can operate it better? Sorry, you have to sell it to pay estate taxes. We hope the company will survive in its next form. Maybe it will. Maybe it will not. There are a lot of operations that cannot withstand that type of a heavy tax.

A farm or a ranch is another good example. You might have a fairly decent farm or ranch maybe adjacent to a large city and so its property valuation is very high. This value could maybe exceed it's agriculture valuation, or the profits or the money that would be generated from the agriculture. Just because it happens to be next to San Diego it is worth millions on the valuation sheets. Maybe somebody says, well, I want to continue farming it and ranching it; I am second or third generation. And we are going to say, no, we are sorry; we have valuated this, and because it happens to be next to San Diego, it is worth millions of dollars so the Federal Government is entitled to take half. They cannot pay half by continuing their agricultural operation, so the only way they can pay taxes is to sell it. What kind of victory is that? We have just broken up a family business, a family farm, or a family ranch. Why? So Uncle Sam can take half that property? Maybe that property is not worth near as much in that present function. What right do we have to do that?

Some taxes are wrong, and this tax happens to be one of those that are wrong. The power to tax, it has often been said, is the power to destroy. If the Government can take half—and in the amendment of Senator CONRAD, the Government can take half. If you have a taxable estate over $3 million, then they have taken away a lot of your—maybe destroyed a lot of incentive to build, grow, expand, and employ. I think of so many entrepreneurs who have built and expanded businesses that are now worth millions of dollars. I look at this amendment and it says: Stop; do not grow anymore because Uncle Sam is going to come in and take half of it. We have decided that is our property and we can handle it better than you can. How many employees will the Government hire out of that type of operation?

I completely disagree with the premise espoused of, let's keep the rates at 50 or 55 percent. Again, I mention the rate. Under the proposal of Senator CONRAD, there is a maximum rate because he has this bonus 5 percent hit if your taxable estate is between $10 million and $17 million. Well, $10 million and $17 million sounds like a lot if that is your disposable income, but if that is your investment that you have grown in plant and equipment, and you are putting the money back in the business year after year, it may not be that big. You may not make that much money. You may have a business that is worth $20 million but it may not make very much money. Yet, under Senator CONRAD's amendment, too bad: You pass away, we have a taxable event, and Uncle Sam gets half. If it is a $20 million business, take away your $3 million deductible and you have a $17 million business. Under his proposal, half of it goes to Uncle Sam—actually, 55 percent of the $17 million. The Government is going to get almost $9 million out of a $20 million business. Congratulations, you are really successful. If this is the case, where are the liquid assets in this $20 million business? You do not have them. You have invested them in plant and equipment, in machinery, in jobs. You did not have them sitting around in CDs and cash, so you have to sell the business to pay the taxes.

That is what the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is. It says, Government, you are entitled to take half; and many of us say, no, you are not. This tax is unfair. It needs to be repealed.

We took a giant step in that direction when we phased down the tax and repealed it in the year 2010. We need to make it permanent, and that is exactly what the Gramm-Kyl-Nickles amendment does, makes it permanent. Senator CONRAD's amendment says, no, we do not want to do that. We will increase the exemption a little bit and then the Government is entitled to get half.

I hope my colleagues will reject that type of unfair tax policy that needs to be repealed. Even if it applies to one small percentage of the American population, it is not right to take it. One can say, well, is it right to take 100 percent of somebody's property if it only affects a few? I think of that as theft, rather than good, sound tax policy.

I heard some people complain, what about the effects on deficits? I started looking at spending. I always hear when we talk about taxes, but when we talk about spending we do not hear about people talking about, what is the impact on Social Security? What is the impact on future deficits? Between the years 2000 and 2001, budget authority went up from $584 billion to $664 billion. That is a 14-percent increase. Between the years 2001 and 2002, it went up to $710 billion. That is a 7-percent increase. That was before we started working on the supplemental. The budget we are working on now that just passed—if we include the supplemental that just passed Congress—is $768 billion. If we add that together, that is an 8-percent increase over the previous year. So we are compounding spending at 14, 7, 8 percent.

Then I look at some of the other requests. The farm bill that we passed about a month ago was $82 billion over the baseline. We are paying cotton farmers 72 cents per pound when we look at cotton that is selling for 32 cents. The market price for cotton is 32 cents, but we are going to pay farmers 72 cents for 6 years.

Look at railroad retirement. We are writing out a check for $15 billion for railroad retirement, something we have never done before.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Program we passed had $11 billion of new entitlements, where the Federal Government is going to pick up 60 percent of health care costs for people who happen to be uninsured, unemployed.

We are going to have a new wage entitlement insurance program under trade adjustment assistance. The supplemental was $3.9 billion over the President's request. The supplemental was almost $4 billion above the President's request. Trade adjustment assistance had $11.1 billion over the President's request in new entitlements. The farm bill was $82.8 billion over the baseline. Railroad retirement is $15 billion. So there is a lot of new spending in excess of about $120 billion that Congress has passed in the last few months. Where is the outrage on the impact on deficits on these bills?

When we start talking about not taking away half of somebody's property when they die and reject this tax policy, perhaps we should have the tax policy be enacted when their property is sold by their beneficiaries. Then there is a taxable event and that taxable event is taxed at the capital gains rate, which is 20 percent. With this method, you would eliminate these billions of dollars that are being spent presently to avoid the tax. To everyone who knows estate planning, the lawyers and the accountants, this is an enormous field, which in my opinion uses a lot of minds in a productive venture to avoid a very unfair tax.

If we said, let us have a tax on capital gains, it would simplify taxation. I think we would see a lot of businesses grow if they did not receive this signal, stop, do not grow anymore because we are going to take half of everything you have. The economy would respond in a very positive way. We would create thousands, maybe hundreds of thousands, of jobs if we could repeal this unfair tax.

I urge my colleagues, when we vote tomorrow, when we have final passage, to vote in favor of the Gramm-Kyl-Nickles amendment to repeal permanently this unfair death tax.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I have been amazed at the argument from the other side, absolutely amazed. My amendment is not as good as the status quo? Their proposal is better? What math are they using?

I grew up in North Dakota, went to North Dakota schools where one and one is two; two and two is four; four and four is eight. That is the math I learned. I don't know what math they are talking about.

Let's talk about the difference between my proposal before the Senate and their proposal. Let's talk about current law. They say mine is not as good as current law. Under current law, next year the exemption will be $1 million. That is 2003. Under my proposal, the exemption is $3 million. So the rate for an individual who has an estate that is taxed next year below $3 million, the rate is zero; their rate above $1 million is 41 percent. Which is better? A zero rate up to $3 million, as in my proposal? Or their proposal, which is a 41-percent rate over $1 million? Can we do the math? Which proposal means less tax to the individual in the family? Zero percent up to $3 million? Or their proposal that says a 41-percent rate over $1 million.

Compare it to current law. My rate is zero percent up to $3 million. They have zero up to $1 million. That is current law. But over that the rate is 41 percent. Let's see, are you going to pay less tax under my proposal or their proposal? Are you going to pay less tax under my proposal or under current law? Come on. I am ready to have an honest debate but let's not twist things around and claim that my proposal taxes more than your proposal. That stands truth and logic on its head.

Mr. KYL. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONRAD. I yield.

Mr. KYL. I agree with the point in the first year there is a greater benefit for individuals but a higher cost to the Government. Would the Senator continue the timeline over the next 10 years?

Mr. CONRAD. I would be happy to do that.

The next year, 2004, their exemption is $1.5 million for current law with a 41-percent rate. Their proposal is a $1.5 million exemption with a 43-percent rate. My proposal is $3 million, nothing, no tax. So you are higher in 2003; you are higher in 2004; you are higher in 2005; you are higher in 2006; you are higher in 2007. That is a long time in which my proposal is better than your proposal.

Not only is my proposal better in terms of the taxpayer for those years, my proposal is better for the Federal Government's Treasury and for fiscal responsibility and for Social Security because our proposal costs less over the next decade than does theirs. Why is that? Because at the end of the decade they eliminate the estate tax completely. It does not matter how big. It does not matter if you have a $50 billion estate, they say you pay no tax.

The Senator from Texas talked about what is fair and right. Let me give an example of why I think what he is proposing is less fair, is less right, than what I am proposing.

Under their proposal, someone with an estate of $50 million—for example, Mr. Skilling, the executive who ran Enron. He would have his estate tax eliminated. The $55 million he would save would be equivalent to all of the Social Security taxes paid in one year by 30,000 people earning $30,000. In other words, in their idea of what is fair, it is more important to take Mr. Skilling off the tax rolls completely, even though his gains, many might say, are ill gotten, it is more important to take him off than to worry about the 30,000 Americans earning $30,000 a year paying that amount of money into Social Security. Make no mistake, these things are directly related.

The proposal I have offered reforms the estate tax. It says nothing is paid starting next year if you are an individual with an estate of less than $3 million, and for a couple that is up to $6 million. You pay zero. That is much better for next year, and 2004, and 2005, and 2006, and 2007, than their proposal. But, at the same time, my proposal costs less because we do not eliminate the estate tax. So my proposal costs $12.6 billion in the first decade; their proposal costs $99.4 billion. That is a dramatic difference. It is at a time when we will be running deficits for the entire next decade. Let me repeat that. We will be running deficits for the entire next decade unless something changes. And just hours ago we had to increase the debt of the United States $450 billion. They are proposing a cost in the second 10 years of $740 billion.

Reform, not repeal, is the best thing for this country's economy, for our fiscal stability, and for fiscal responsibility. And interestingly enough, it is the best thing for taxpayers. It is the best thing for taxpayers because they get a better break now. We go from a $1 million exemption to a $3 million. Next year, that would be $6 million for a couple.

This idea of repeal which they have proposed is a hoax. I don't think it will ever happen. They can pass it now, but I don't think it will happen. By some other name this tax will come back and we will have denied people the ability to plan and we will also have denied people the chance to get a greater exemption now, which is what I am proposing.

When I was raised, I was taught a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. This proposal I am making is a bird in the hand, a $3 million exemption, or a $6 million exemption for a couple, starting next year, instead of the $1 million exemption that exists in current law and the $1 million they have in their plan.

The choice is pretty clear, pretty simple, but pretty important.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, our dear colleague has a substitute which costs a "fraction" of a repeal but it is better. If his amendment sounds too good to be true, it is because it is too good to be true.

The first thing he never mentioned was if you are a small business or family farm and you are engaged in any estate planning, and we know that small businesses and family farms spend dollars in estate planning, this completely wipes all that out. I can show figures on a small business, a $10 million small business, the tax would equally be higher next year under his proposal than under ours. But we do not have to get into all this gamesmanship. It really boils down to a simple question. We repeal the death tax for everybody.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator yield on that last point?

Mr. GRAMM. I will yield. I only have a couple of minutes, so do it fast.

Mr. CONRAD. I would love to see the calculation the Senator has.

Mr. GRAMM. I will be glad to show him. I have someone from the Finance Committee here, the staff person who worked on this. She worked out the example of $10 million, and I will send her over with it so your staff can take a look at it.

Mr. CONRAD. I would love to take a look at that.

Mr. GRAMM. Here is the point. We don't need to get into all this business about "he did," "he didn't," "he did," "he didn't." It boils down to this. We said we repeal the death tax and we repealed it. Only there is a trick: it comes back in 10 years.

Senator KYL and I want to repeal it so it is dead forever. We do not think death ought to be a taxable event. We don't think you ought to have to sell your family's farm, business, or estate to pay tax on money which you have already paid taxes on.

The Senator says let's do it for some people but not other people. Let's do it for some Americans but not other Americans. And let's, at the same time, ban all of the procedures whereby every small business in America and every family farm in America is planning for estate taxes to try to minimize their costs.

The bottom line is: Are you for a repeal for everybody or are you for a repeal for some of the people? It really boils down to that simple issue.

As for this argument about Social Security, I hope everybody understands that we collect a payroll tax for Social Security. The death tax collects less than 1 percent of revenues, and none of that money goes into Social Security. In fact, as I pointed out over and over and over, five times in the last 9 months we have spent cumulatively about 20 times the amount that it would take to repeal the death tax. So, obviously, it is not a question of money. It is a question of priorities.

I yield the floor. We are through on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Might I address a question to the Senator from North Dakota since the Senator from Nevada is not here. It is our understanding under the unanimous consent agreement the next amendment that will be laid down will be laid down by Senator DORGAN or by Senator REID on his behalf?

Here is Senator REID. Perhaps we could get this underway now. If I could inquire of the Senator from Nevada, the time having expired under the unanimous consent agreement on the first amendment laid down, is the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota next? The next thing that will transpire is that the Senator from Nevada on behalf of the other Senator from North Dakota will lay down an amendment; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota still has 5 minutes.

Mr. KYL. I am sorry. I thought the Chair said all time had expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas had expired.

Mr. KYL. If the Senator from North Dakota still has 5 minutes, I will yield the floor to the Senator from North Dakota. But if we could get a clarification about what is going to happen when that time has expired, I would appreciate it.

Mr. REID. If the Senator from North Dakota will yield without this time counting against his 5 minutes, I will respond to the question of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I say to the Senator, at this time the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. DORGAN, is working on some minor changes in the amendment that he offered previously. That amendment, I cannot go into detail on.

Basically, what it does is exempt from the estate tax small farms and businesses that let descendants take over after the death of the party—the same amendment he offered previously that I think got 43 votes. Basically, that is the amendment.

I do say to my friend, I just talked to the cloakroom and he is making some changes. We were and are entitled to two second-degree amendments under the unanimous consent agreement. At this stage we may only offer one of them. Senator DORGAN is trying to change the one amendment so there may be one amendment rather than two. As soon as we get something in writing, we will let the Senator from Arizona know. I do not think there is any question that the amendment you are going to lay down is the same one we have seen before, just an outright repeal?

Mr. KYL. Also, not taking away the time of the Senator from North Dakota, the Senator from Nevada is correct. I just inquire, then, for the benefit of all Senators, when the Senator from North Dakota has completed his 5 minutes of concluding remarks, could the Senator from Nevada explain what happens at that point?

Mr. REID. I have spoken to the majority leader. We have the Prime Minister of Australia coming for a joint session of Congress tomorrow morning. We are going to do a limited amount of morning business in the morning. Then the escort committee would go with the Senators over to the House side and listen to that speech. That is expected to be completed and we will be back in session approximately 12:30 tomorrow afternoon.

At that time, Senator DORGAN will lay down his second-degree amendment with a 2-hour time limit. We would vote at approximately 2:30 on the Dorgan amendment, then the Conrad amendment, and then we would turn to the Senator from Texas. He would lay down his amendment which would probably be around 3:15. At 5:15 or 5:30, thereabouts, debate on that would be completed, and I hope on or about that time we could vote on the amendment of the Senator from Texas and be finished with this matter.

Mr. GRAMM. If the Senator will yield, let me just reaffirm so everybody knows, I will offer exactly the language that passed the House, repealing the death tax permanently. So if we did it, it would go right to the President, he would sign it into law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, let me conclude this debate as I began. I believe our votes must be informed by the current fiscal condition of the country. As the President said to us last year, his budget was going to pay off $2 trillion of debt over the next decade. He said, at that time, that would be the largest debt reduction of any country ever.

Now the President comes to us 1 year later and says: Whoops, forget about that. Forget about maximum paydown of the debt. Forget about paying down more debt than any country ever. Instead of paying down debt, I am asking you, Members of Congress, for the second biggest increase in the debt in our Nation's history.

The only bigger request for an increase in the debt was made by the current President's father when he was President. He asked for and received a $915 billion increase in the national debt in one fell swoop, in November of 1990.

Now comes this President and he asks for a $750 billion increase in the debt, the second biggest in our Nation's history.

We all have to think a moment about the changed circumstances. Just hours ago, this Chamber voted to increase this Nation's debt by $450 billion. Now our colleagues on the other side are here saying they want to increase the debt another $100 billion in this 10 years, by another $740 billion in the second decade.

Let's look at where we are and where we are headed. This chart shows that from 1992 to 2000 we pulled out of deficit. We got ourselves into circumstances in which we were running surpluses. Last year with the President's budget plan we plunged back into deficit, and we now are told that we can expect deficits the entire rest of the decade. That is before their proposal to dig the hole even deeper. And the outlook for the years beyond is even more serious.

That brings us to the question of what do we do on the estate tax. I acknowledge we need to reform the estate tax—$1 million is too low for a tax to be imposed. So I proposed that next year we go to $3 million of exemption for an individual estate; $6 million for a couple. They would pay zero under my proposal. A couple would pay no estate tax up to $6 million. Our friends on the other side, they don't get to $3 million until 2009.

My proposal also freezes the maximum estate tax rate at 50 percent. It retains stepped-up basis. I know that is a confusing term, but it is an important one. What it means is that in the future, you will pay taxes on what you inherit based on the value at the time you inherit it, not what grandpa paid for the property, not what grandma paid for the property, but what it was worth when it passed to you.

That is a very important difference between their proposal and mine. While my proposal is more generous to taxpayers in the short term, it is also more fiscally responsible because we don't eliminate the estate tax completely as their proposal does. They are proposing to eliminate the estate tax completely after the year 2010. My proposal saves hundreds of billions of dollars that otherwise are going to come straight out of Social Security. There is no other place for it to come from. They deny it. They say this has no effect on Social Security. Really? Where is the money coming from? There is only one place it can come from; that is, straight out of Social Security.

My proposal will reduce the number of estates that are taxable from the current level, which is 2 percent. Only 2 percent of all estates in America have any tax. I would reduce that to three-tenths of 1 percent, but at the same time save the fiscal position of the country.

There is no question that what they are talking about—estate tax repeal—raids Social Security trust funds. Look at what it does. Their idea of fairness is to eliminate the estate taxes for somebody like Mr. Skilling, former CEO of Enron, who would save under their plan an estimated at $55 million. That is equivalent to all of the Social Security taxes paid in a year by 30,000 American people earning $30,000.

They say their proposal is fair. They say their proposal is equitable. I don't see it. Taking all of the taxes from 30,000 people earning $30,000 a year to eliminate the estate taxes of Mr. Skilling is not fair.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I wanted to announce that there will be no further votes today. I appreciate the vigorous debate we have had on the Conrad amendment, and appreciate Senators coming to the floor to move the schedule along.

It is my hope that we will have a vote at approximately 2:30 tomorrow, and it may be stacked with another amendment.

I urge Senators to offer their amendments because we will miss a window here, and we will then make a point of order on the bill itself sometime tomorrow.

We are not going to wait for Senators. They are either going to offer their amendments or they are going to miss the opportunity.

So those Senators who have amendments need to come to the floor and lay them down and have the debate, as Senator CONRAD did this afternoon.

We will pick up this debate again tomorrow morning.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period not to exceed 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO FLOYD CALVERT, JR.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I recognize an American who honorably served our Nation for nearly 40 years. At the age of 25, Lieutenant Floyd Calvert Jr., an Oklahoman and Cherokee Indian, served as a bomber pilot in the U.S. Army Air Corps flying B–29 aircraft in the Pacific Theater during World War II.

On June 1, 1945, Lt. Calvert and his crew of ten from the 504th Bomb Group took off from Tininan Island, in the Marianias to strike Osaka, Japan. Immediately after delivering his ordnance, his B–29 aircraft was hit and severely damaged by anti-aircraft artillery fire. Lt. Calvert's headset was blown off inflicting wounds in his scalp and left arm. His co-pilot was also wounded and unable to assist in flying the damaged B–29. With the right inboard engine on fire, Lt. Calvert placed his aircraft in a steep dive to extinguish the flames. With the fire out he tried in vain to feather the engine but the runaway propeller spun off and flew into the right outboard engine, creating a very grave situation with both engines on the right side inoperable. Lt. Calvert's crew decided to remain with the crippled B–29. Wounded and bleeding, Lt. Calvert flew solo toward the airfield at Iwo Jima. To reduce the aircraft's weight and extend its range, he proceeded to jettison all removable items, to include life rafts, reducing their chances of survival if they had to ditch the aircraft into the Pacific Ocean. Once over Iwo Jima, Lt. Calvert circled his bomber to permit other bomber aircraft to recover or bail out over the tiny island. In a feat of unprecedented airmanship and heroism, Lt. Calvert then flew a flawless approach and landing, bringing his crew to safety in an aircraft that would never fly again.

Like so many of his time, Lt. Calvert returned to Oklahoma and began a fifty-one year marriage and raised five children. He worked for 34 years as a federal employee at Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma City and served on his local school board and in his church. Today, at age 82, he resides with his youngest daughter, her husband and their two children, and he remains an inspiration to our generation as we look back and admire the heroes of our past. I thank him for his unwavering service and sacrifice to the United States of America. May God bless Floyd Calvert Jr. and his family.

RECOGNITION OF THE VALOR, DEDICATION, AND PATRIOTISM OF CHALDEAN AMERICAN VETERANS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, later this month, on June 14th, people in my home state of Michigan will be gathering at a special ceremony to honor men and women of the U.S. armed forces who have served to preserve our nation's freedom. This ceremony held by the Chaldean American Ladies of Charity will pay tribute to Chaldean American men and women who have served or are currently serving in our Nation's military.

It is particularly poignant that people are gathering to honor Chaldean American veterans on the day set aside to honor our foremost symbol of freedom: the American flag. At a time when we are reminded of the priceless value of our many freedoms, it is important that we do not forget the heroes who fought so fearlessly and valiantly in past conflicts to protect our nation and our freedoms. Such brave men and women have preserved our liberty and democratic values and safeguarded our freedom to pursue the American dream.

The Chaldeans are people who possess a long and fascinating history. They have traditionally spoken a form of Aramaic, the language in which the New Testament was written, and possess an interesting theological history that includes a reunion with the Roman Catholic Church in 1551 A.D. This reunion led to the establishment of the Chaldean rite of the Catholic Church.

Many Chaldeans immigrated to the United States from Iraq, and have played an important part in our nation's growth and success. Detroit is privileged to be home to the largest Chaldean community in the United States. In Detroit and throughout the nation, Chaldean Americans have dedicated themselves to the making a better life in America. Detroit, the State of Michigan and our nation have benefitted from their patriotism, hard work and dedication to community, faith and family. These many contributions have greatly benefitted our nation and have included the service of nearly two hundred Chaldean Americans in the United States Armed Forces.

The entire Chaldean American community can take pride in their long and honorable tradition of service to our nation, particularly their service in our nation's armed forces. I am sure that my Senate colleagues join me and the Chaldean American Ladies of Charity in paying tribute to Chaldean American veterans.

REMEMBERING THE MIA'S OF SULTAN YAQUB ON THE TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THEIR CAPTURE

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in remembering the Israeli soldiers captured by the Syrians during the 1982 Israeli war with Lebanon. It is with great sadness that we mark today 20 long years of anguish for their families, who continue to desperately seek information about their sons.

On June 11, 1982, an Israeli unit battled with a Syrian armored unit in the Bekaa Valley in northeastern Lebanon. Sergeant Zachary Baumel, First Sergeant Zvi Feldman, and Corporal Yehudah Katz were captured by the Syrians that day. They were identified as an Israeli tank crew, and reported missing in Damascus. The Israeli tank, flying the Syrian and Palestinian flag, was greeted with cheers from bystanders.

Since that terrible day in 1982, the governments of Israel and the United States have been doing their utmost by working with the office of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the United Nations, and other international bodies to obtain any possible information about the fate of the missing soldiers. According to the Geneva Convention, Syria is responsible for the fates of the Israeli soldiers because the area in Lebanon where the soldiers disappeared was continually controlled by Syria. To this day, despite promises made by the government of Syria and by the Palestinians, very little information has been released about the condition of Zachary Baumel, Zvi Feldman, and Yehudah Katz.

Today marks the anniversary of the day that these soldiers were reported missing in action. Twenty pain-filled years have passed since their families have seen their sons, and still Syria has not revealed their whereabouts nor provided any information as to their condition.

One of these missing soldiers, Zachary Baumel, is an American citizen from my home of Brooklyn, New York. An ardent basketball fan, Zachary began his studies at the Hebrew School in Boro Park. In 1979, he moved to Israel with other family members and continued his education at Yeshivat Hesder, where religious studies are integrated with army service. When the war with Lebanon began, Zachary was completing his military service and was looking forward to attending Hebrew University, where he had been accepted to study psychology. But fate decreed otherwise and on June 11, 1982, he disappeared with Zvi Feldman and Yehudah Katz.

During the 106th Congress, I co-sponsored and helped to pass Public Law 106–89, which specifies that the State Department must raise the plight of these missing soldiers in all relevant discussions and report findings to Congress regarding developments in the Middle East. We need to know that every avenue has been pursued in order to help bring about the speedy return of these young men. Therefore, I strongly feel that we must be sure to continue the full implementation of Public Law 106–89, so that information about these men can be brought to light.

Zachary's parents Yonah and Miriam Baumel have been relentless in their pursuit of information about Zachary and his compatriots. I have worked closely with the Baumels, as well as the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, the American Coalition for Missing Israeli Soldiers, and the MIA Task Force of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations. These groups have been at the forefront of this pursuit of justice. I want to recognize their good work and ask my colleagues to join me in supporting their efforts. For two decades these families have been without their children. Answers are long overdue.

I am not only saddened by the plight of Zachary Baumel, Zvi Feldman, and Yehudah Katz, but I am disheartened and angered by the fact that even as we have continued to search for answers about their welfare, we have been forced to add more names to the list of those for who we have no knowledge of their location, health, or safety.

IDF Soldier Guy Chever disappeared without a trace from his army base in the Golan on August 17th, 1997. Almost three years later, Colonel Elchanan Tanenbaum was kidnapped by Hezbollah while on a business trip in Europe on October 15th, 2000. Left behind are two more families who simply do not know what has become of their loved ones.

And at this time, I feel it is also appropriate to speak not only of those who remain missing, but for those who were unfairly taken from their families never to return. I am speaking of course of Sergeant Adi Avitan of Tiberias, Staff Sergeant Binyamin Avraham of Bnei Brak, and Staff Sergeant Omar Souad of Salma.

In a clear-cut violation of international law, these three Israeli soldiers were abducted by Hezbollah on October 7, 2000 while on operational duty along the border fence in the Dov Mountain range along Israel's border with Lebanon. It is believed that they were wounded during the incident.

According to an investigation by the IDF Northern Command, Hezbollah terrorists set two roadside bombs, then crossed through a gate near the fence, pulled the three soldiers out of their jeep and fired anti-armor missiles at the empty vehicle. The soldiers were then taken by the terrorists to the Lebanese side of the border. Although the United States called on Syria to assist in the timely release of these three soldiers, no information was given as to their conditions or whereabouts. The International Red Cross had also been requested to intervene by attempting to arrange for a visit with the three kidnapped IDF soldiers in order to ascertain their status.

After much soul searching and heartache, it was determined that the return of these men to their homes and loved ones could no longer be hoped for. Their families have grieved, and my heart goes out to them. The hope I hold now is that we will not allow the families of those who remain missing to suffer in the same way.

The agony of the families of these kidnapped Israeli soldiers is extreme. They have not heard a word regarding the fate of their sons who are being held captive for political ransom. We must pledge to do our utmost to bring these soldiers home, for the same of peace, decency and humanity.

VOTE EXPLANATION

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I regret I was not able to vote on S. Res. 272. My airline flight back to Washington, DC was delayed for many hours because of adverse weather conditions. I express my support for this measure and applaud its passage. A national referendum to support a more democratic process based upon 10,000 signatures to the Cuban National Assembly is laudable. I ask that the record show that I would have voted in favor of S. Res. 272 and I support its passage. My vote did not affect the outcome because the resolution passed overwhelmingly.

SUPPORT OF AMERICAN SILVER EAGLE BULLION PROGRAM ACT

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, last week I introduced with my colleague from Nevada, Senator REID, the Support of American Silver Eagle Bullion Program Act. This legislation will preserve our most successful silver coin program, the American Silver Eagle Bullion Program.

From the inception of the program, the Silver Eagle coin has been the domestic and global market share leader in commemorative coin programs. It is also the largest of the United States Mint's silver coin programs. From Fiscal Year 1995–2001, the program has generated revenues of more than $264 million. Profits from this program ultimately go into the Treasury General Fund, which reduces the government's debt.

Since 1986, the Mint, through interagency agreements with the Defense Logistics Agency, has been using the Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpile as a source of silver from the American Eagle Silver Bullion Program. The use of the Stockpile silver is a result of legislative mandates. This stockpile of silver, which had a beginning balance of 137.5 million ounces, is rapidly being depleted. At the current rate of depletion, the silver will be depleted in approximately two months.

With the depletion of silver reserves in the Defense Logistics Agency Stockpile, it has become necessary for the Department of the Treasury to acquire silver from other sources in order to continue the Silver Eagle Program. This bill adds a stockpile depletion contingency provision to the United States Code that allows the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain silver from other available sources, while not paying more than the average world price.

I rise today to introduce this legislation because it is vital to the economy in my home State of Idaho. The mines of the Silver Valley in North Idaho produce more than $70 million of silver per year, along with employing over 3,000 Idahoans and contributing more than $900 million to the overall Idaho economy.

Moreover, I am proud to recognize that the blanks used by the United States mint in their American Eagle Silver Bullion Program are produced by Sunshine Minting, Inc., in Coeur d'Alene, ID. Approximately 60 people at Sunshine Minting work directly on the U.S. Mint Silver Eagle Program.

Idaho's mining sector is a critical component of our national economy, and this bill makes certain that we preserve the Silver Eagle program and keep valuable mining jobs in Idaho and other silver mining states. It is my hope that the Senate will move expeditiously to consider and pass this legislation before the stockpile is deleted.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

FOUR SOUTH CAROLINA STUDENTS TO PRESENT HISTORY PROJECTS

• Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate four Cheraw, SC, students who will be in Washington, DC tomorrow exhibiting their history projects as part of National History Day.

These young historians were selected out of more than half a million from across America, and they are bringing with them months of research. They earned the trip by showing they are the best of the best, and our State and Nation are better off for their hard work. When young people, on their own, want to understand the fundamental principles and values of our democracy, they are more likely to vote. They are more likely to participate in public service. They are more likely to take seriously the civic commitment this nation needs in the new century.

I wish the very best to Bryan Blair, whose exhibit is "The Orangeburg Massacre: Revolution, Reaction, and Reform in South Carolina"; and to Meagan Linton, Mary Hudson, and Jordan Thomas, whose exhibit is: "Tears of Sorrow or Tears of Joy: Reaction to the Assassination of Abraham Lincoln."•

IN HONOR OF W. RALPH GAMBER, FOUNDER OF DUTCH GOLD HONEY

• Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, Friday, June 14, is our National Flag Day. This year, Flag Day has special meaning for many in Lancaster, PA, it will be a day of remembrance for the life and work of W. Ralph Gamber. It is particularly appropriate that Ralph's legacy will be honored on Flag Day; in many ways, he lived the American dream through the kind of patriotism that is grounded in community involvement and love of family. The company Ralph founded in 1946, Dutch Gold Honey, Inc., will also be honored as part of his legacy and those who will gather at the site of his family business in Lancaster will dedicate a flagpole in his memory.

Ralph Gamber began his honey processing business with a $27 investment in three beehives in the mid-1940s. What was initially a hobby of canning honey in the family garage grew to be a vehicle for innovation and a model for the success of hard work and family cooperation. Today, Dutch Gold Honey is one of the largest independent honey packers in the nation and, as an industry symbol of quality and partnership, remains family-owned and operated. The plastic honey bears seen on the shelves of every grocery store in America are Ralph's invention and their success led to the creation of the Gamber Container Company. Ralph, his wife Luella, and his three children have made an incredible contribution to the Lancaster area through their business accomplishments. Ralph served a term as president of the National Honey Packers & Dealers and in 1992, was recognized as Pennsylvania Entrepreneur of the Year by Entrepreneur Magazine. Additionally, the Gambers established the Gamber Foundation, a resource to support local charities and nonprofit organizations, honeybee research, and scholarships for the children of Dutch Gold Honey employees.

Ralph Gamber's legacy, however, is not limited to his honey-related work. His life's worth of community and family focus is what earns him particular attention on Flag Day. To Ralph, work was an extension of family togetherness and he firmly believed that when families pray together, they stay together. Evidently, a family that stays together is one that can also share in building a unique, successful business. Ralph would count his 66-year marriage, three children, eight grandchildren, and nine-great-grandchildren among his greatest accomplishments. He was involved with the Salvation Army and helped to found his local fire company. He was a veteran of the Second World War and, with a strong connection to his church, Ralph acted as Sunday school superintendent for many years, was a member of his church council, and later chaired the church's stewardship committee. Throughout his life and through his livelihood, Ralph has demonstrated his commitment to the community and people he cared so much about. I share his story today because I believe it is worthy of our admiration and it is evidence of how the American Dream continues to inspire us.

My thoughts will be with the family and friends of Ralph Gamber this Flag Day. When our national banner is raised over Dutch Gold Honey, it will be a reminder to all who see it that love, perseverance, and community are the keys to success in family and in life.•

AMERICA: A NATION OF IMMIGRANTS

• Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, each year the American Immigration Law Foundation and the American Immigration Lawyers Association sponsor a national writing contest on immigration. Thousands of fifth-grade students from across the country participate in the competition, responding to the statement, "Why I'm Glad America is a Nation of Immigrants."

These essays remind us that it is of great importance that we not forget our rich history and heritage as a nation of immigrants. Continued immigration is part of our national well-being, our identity as a nation, and our strength in today's world.

I had the privilege of serving as one of the judges for this year's contest, and was very impressed by the young writers. In their essays, the students showed great pride in our Nation's diversity and its immigrant heritage, and many told the story of their own family's immigration.

I am pleased to announce that this year's winner is a Massachusetts resident, Nicole Florio, a fifth-grade student in Framingham, MA. In her poem, "Why Am I Glad," Nicole explores the value of her friends' cultures and how their diversity enhances her life. She describes the diverse traditions and treasures of her friends, from Ceilidh's Irish step-dancing to Anastasia's nesting dolls. In the final stanza, Nicole notes how she herself is a product of immigrants, as all of us are, and that without immigration, "there would be no me!"

Other students honored for their creative essays were Mike Duffy of Sarasota, FL, Emily Friedman of Los Angeles, CA, Christina Jundt of Norcross, GA, and Ilana Peña of North Miami Beach, FL.

I believe that these award-winning essays in the "Celebrate America" contest will be of interest to all of us in the Senate, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The essays follow.

WHY AM I GLAD AMERICA IS A NATION OF IMMIGRANTS

(By Nicole Florio, Hemenway Elementary School, Farmingham, MA, Grand Prize Winner)

People come to America from many different places,
I have lots of friends of many different races.

Ceilidh's from Ireland,
we have loads of fun,
she taught me Irish step-dancing
we dance till day is done!

Jessica's from Colombia,
she speaks Spanish, to speak two languages
is my wish.

Anastasia is from Russia,
I adore her nesting dolls,
I looked for them
in all of the malls.

Cara and Cady are from China,
Cady's grandma grows bamboo.
They both love Chinese New Year and I do too!

Murat is from Turkey,
his wedding I did love, when we left the fireworks blasted 'bove!

Nicole is from Israel,
she is thirteen.
When she had her Bat Mitzvah
she looked like a queen!

If I didn't have these friends,
how boring life would be!

I'm glad America has immigrants as you can plainly see.
Mom's family is from Poland,
Dad's from Italy,
if my grandparents didn't come
there would be no me!

Based on a true story!

WHY I AM GLAD AMERICA IS A NATION OF IMMIGRANTS

(By Mike Duffy, Pine View Elementary, Sarasota, FL, Runner-Up)

I am glad America is a nation of immigrants. When the original immigrants came to America, they came here seeking freedom of expression, religious freedom, and freedom from oppression. This helped to form our constitution, which gives us those same equal rights today.

The diverseness of the people who came here for opportunities brought about a culture that the world had not previously seen before. It also gave us ideas that would have never come to light otherwise.

Living with other cultures teaches us new things and makes us more tolerant and understanding of our fellow man. The education we gave each other makes us more open to new ideas and better technology. Our nation is the strongest and best because of our unity.

In America all religions are practiced freely. Our different beliefs are acknowledged and respected. This makes us strong and proud. Our way of life is often challenged though. Freedom is always at stake from those who wish to dominate. Brave immigrants past and present, who took the chance of coming here for a better life; help keep our country free and strong. Once they have enjoyed the freedom we have, they are willing to stand up and fight to keep that freedom.

Mutual respect, which all people can enjoy here in this country, is why we (all cultures) come together so readily, when any part of our nation is in trouble. It is living proof that despite our differences we are all Americans at heart.

A NATION OF IMMIGRANTS

(By Emily Friedman, Stephen S. Wise Elementary, Los Angeles, CA, AILA Southern California Chapter Contest Winner)

In early September my teachers asked, "Do you think America is a melting pot or a salad bowl?" After thinking about it, I decided America is neither. America is not like a melting pot because all the cultures do not blend together and become unnoticeable. However, America is not a salad bowl because cultures do not stay as distinct as lettuce and cucumbers in a salad. I thought America should be described as a chunky, minestrone soup. The ingredients stay distinct, but as the soup simmers, the ingredients like cultures interact and blend with each other.

The different spices and vegetables that go into minestrone soup are like the immigrants from different places around the world. The immigrants spice up the soup and make it flavorful. With the exception of Native Americans, we were all once immigrants. The best secret of a minestrone soup is that it never stays the same. As immigrants come from all over the world, they contribute to the taste of the soup. They bring their language, traditions, foods and customs and their various dreams for a better life for freedom and opportunity. They also add their ideas for a better America and make contributions to our society.

I am proud to live in a country where people can be free and where everyone can contribute. I am glad America is a nation of immigrants because without them, America wouldn't be a chunky bowl of delicious minestrone soup.

AMERICA—A NATION OF IMMIGRANTS

(By Christina Jundt, Simpson Elementary School, Norcross, GA, AILA Atlanta Chapter Contest Winner)

As Immigrants traveled over the rolling sea, checked in at Ellis Island, suffered through minimum wage jobs, and endured criticism from the people around them, they had no idea they would change American people, and America itself forever.

America is like a giant mosaic—the most beautiful in the world. If the mosaic was all one color, the beauty would be gone. The pieces are all beautiful in their own way. Not one piece is more important than another. Not one piece shines more brightly than another. The mosaic is perfect, and without Immigrants, this could not have been accomplished. So much of our lives would be different if it wasn't for the diverse nationalities, and the Immigrants that traveled from those nations. Every time you eat a plate of spaghetti, think of an Italian Immigrant. Every time you bite into a bar of chocolate, think of a Mexican Immigrant. Every time you look around your community, and see people nationalities, who have different religions, who have different customs, think of an Immigrant who bravely traveled from their hometown, to bring us those unique ways of life. These Immigrants enriched and influenced our lives in so many positive ways.

WHY I'M GLAD AMERICA IS A NATION OF IMMIGRANTS

(By Ilana Peña, Oaks Elementary School, North Miami Beach, FL, AILA Southern Florida Chapter Contest Winner)

Tomatoes, cucumbers, lettuce . . . Russians, Cubans, Asians . . . This is America, a nation of immigrants. Many people say America is a melting pot, everybody coming from different nations but melting into America. We are all proud to be Americans, but I think of us not as a melting pot, but as a salad bowl.

A salad bowl is made up of different vegetables, each with it's own distinct flavor. When you take a bite, you still taste each individual vegetable, but mixed all together, the salad is delicious. Each American has his own distinct identity yet mixes together to create our wonderful America, a country made up of different people, with different cultures and backgrounds.

Being a country of immigrants makes America a dynamic place to live. We are rich with unique cultures. I have a friend whose family comes from India, and I am fascinated by her stories about her family's home country. Because of immigrants, there are different foods in our country, different clothing, different songs, and different ways of dancing.

My father and his family came from Cuba, and my mother's family came from Russia. I am grateful that my country welcomed them here in the United States of America. On our Thanksgiving table is not only the traditional turkey, but frijoles negros, and kugel pudding. It makes me realize what a remarkable country I live in, as we all, Jews and Cubans, sit around a long table with the salad in the center representing our country, and share our cultures.●

TRIBUTE TO DAN KUNSMAN

● Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise today to say good-bye to a good friend who has worked with me for over 10 years.

Dan Kunsman has been my Communications Director for the last eight years, adding to some 3 years of assisting me on the House side when I was the lone congressman from Wyoming. Also a native son of Wyoming, his work for me and the great State extends deeply into the heart and soul of the West and will continue long into the future.

Dan joined my office in the U.S. House of Representatives in 1991 right out of school. Dan did a great job for me and was promoted to Communications Director when I was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1994.

Dan has not only been valuable in Washington, he was also a crucial part of three, statewide, victorious campaigns. He also took time from our efforts on sabbatical to assist with the success of my good friend and colleague, Senator ENZI, on his initial election effort in 1996.

We're part of a team, my staff and I. Along with my wife, Susan, we feel strongly bound to service for the people of Wyoming. As we say in the West, Dan's a good hand. That's a high compliment. It means that he's part of the team, reliable in a storm or any circumstance. In the House, Senate and on the campaign trail, Dan has proved to be one of the brightest and most effective public policy communicators and political strategists in Wyoming and Washington.

Dan has decided to join Brimmer Communications and will lead a new Washington, DC office for the public relations firm based in Jackson Hole, Wyoming. While it's always hard to see good people move on, in this case, I'm glad Dan plans to go to a strong firm at home and stay close to Wyoming people.

I'm not always the best at saying good-bye. I don't like to say it. So I'll just say see you, and I hope that's true. I'll look forward to it.

To our friend, Dan, I wish him and his wife, Isabel, the best of luck, and I know the Senate does as well.●

COMMEMORATION OF KING KAMEHAMEHA I

● Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today in commemoration of the birthday of Hawaii's first monarch, King Kamehameha I. More than two centuries since his birth, Kamehameha is a legendary, indeed, mythical figure renown worldwide for his bravery and martial brilliance. He commands the respect of Hawaii's people for his wise and just leadership, and his accomplishments continue to influence and govern Hawaii today.

Historically, Kamehameha is notable because of his brilliance as a military strategist and political leader. Kamehameha adapted Western innovation, weaponry, and science to gain a decisive advantage in his drive to unify the Hawaiian Islands. For Native Hawaiians and the people of Hawaii, Kamehameha is beloved for his concern and attention to the well-being of his subjects and for his commitment to do what was just and right for the people.

Kamehameha's wisdom, even more than his strength, stature, and daring, is his greatest and most enduring legacy for Hawaii's indigenous peoples—the Native Hawaiians, the people of Hawaii, and all students of history. Mamalohoe, the Law of the Splintered Paddle, is the most prominent example of Kamehameha as a wise and just leader. Mamalahoe is Hawaii's first Bill of Rights protecting the common people from assault, and it is still part of our State's constitution.

One hundred and ninety years ago, in the summer of 1812, Kamehameha returned to the Kona Coast. Having unified the islands and established peace and stability, Kamehameha worked to build prosperity for his people by increasing agricultural production and foreign trade.

The first observance of a day honoring King Kamehameha was proclaimed by King Kamehameha V on June 11, 1872, in the Kingdom of Hawaii. It remains an annual holiday in the State of Hawaii. This year marks the 130th anniversary of the only holiday in the United States created to honor a once-reigning monarch in the only state that was once a kingdom, the State of Hawaii.●

MISSION OF PEACE HOUSING COUNSELING AGENCY

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I have come today to ask the Senate to join with me in paying tribute to the Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency which is located in the City of Flint, in my home state of Michigan.

Home ownership has long been one of the best ways for individuals and families to acquire capital, build equity and secure entry into the middle class. Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency was founded in 1997 by Reverend Elmira Smith-Vincent to assist those who desire to own their own home thereby gaining further control over their financial futures. As a real estate agent, Reverend Smith-Vincent saw a need to educate people and provide them with the skills needed to purchase a home. A faith-based, non profit agency, Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency provides assistance to families and individuals in the skills needed to purchase a home.

Since its inception, Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency has developed strong working relationships with the Department of Housing and Urban Development, The Fannie Mae Corporation, the Fannie Mae Foundation, the United States Department of the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Bank, area banks and lenders, local governments, schools, and the faith-based community. These strong relationships have enabled the Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency to have accomplished many great things since its inception only five years ago.

In 2001, they formed a partnership with Fannie Mae to offer the Mission of Peace Faith-Based Home ownership Initiative. As well, they implemented with great success an Individual Development Account program which allows participants to open an account at the Fifth Third Bank to save toward the down payment and closing cost of home purchase. Most recently, the United States Department of the Treasury announced that Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency is a recipient of a First Accounts Program Grant to assist "unbanked" people. Through this grant, they will provide services in Genesee, Lapeer, Oakland, Saginaw and Shiwasee Counties.

Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency is a leader in helping people take control of their financial well-being and has been recognized numerous times for their achievements. Some of the agencies awards include the Local and National HUD Best Practices Award, the Congress of National Bank Churches Client Volume Award, Homeowners and Outstanding Achievement Awards, Fannie Mae Partner Award, State of Michigan Special Tribute Award, the City of Flint Peppy Rosenthal Human Service Award and the Project Zero Partner of the Year Family Independence Agency of Genesee County Award. I know my Senate colleagues join me in congratulating Mission of Peace Housing Counseling Agency on the work that they have done, and in wishing them well in the years to come.●

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 2607. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to collect recreation fees on Federal lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to authorize the Federal land management agencies, the National Park Service, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Land Management and Forest Service, to collect visitor recreation fees, and to use the proceeds from the fees to continue to fund high priority resource protection and maintenance backlog needs.

Following enactment of the Recreation Fee Demonstration Program in 1996, the Federal agencies have been authorized to experiment with various fee collection proposals. That program also authorized the Federal agencies, for the first time, to retain all of the fee revenues and to use those funds, without the need for further appropriation, on maintenance backlog and other funding needs.

The Recreation Fee Demonstration Program has been extended each year, most recently through September 30, 2004. For the most part, the fee demonstration program has been very successful. However, unlike the previous fee authority in the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, the fee demonstration program contained no guidance to the agencies or limitations on the types of fees that could be collected. As a result, the program has generated some controversy, especially with respect to certain Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management lands where fees had not historically been charged.

The bill I am introducing today builds upon the positive results from the Recreation Fee Demonstration Program, while including new criteria to ensure that fees are not imposed inappropriately. The bill provides the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture with considerable discretion to administer the program while ensuring that recreational access to Federal lands remains available to all Americans. Most importantly, the bill maintains the existing requirement that a majority of the fees be retained for expenditure at the site where collected.

I believe there is strong support for enacting permanent fee authority. The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources will hold a hearing on this bill on June 19, and I hope it will be ready for consideration by the full Senate in the near future.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2607

Be it enacted in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(C) the public policy and management objectives served;

(D) costs to the visitor;

(E) the effect of multiple fees charged within the same area;

(F) fees charged at comparable sites by other public agencies; and

(G) the economic and administrative feasibility of fee collection at the site.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall work cooperatively to ensure that comparable fees and services are established on Federal lands under each Secretary's jurisdiction, and that guidelines for assessing the type and amount of recreation fees are consistent between areas under each Secretary's jurisdiction.

(3) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall, to the extent practicable, seek to minimize multiple fees within specific units or areas.

(d) RECREATION USE FEES.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture may provide for the collection of recreation use fees where the Federal agency develops, administers, provides, or furnishes at Federal expense, specialized outdoor recreation sites, facilities, equipment, or services.

SEC. 4. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish guidelines identifying the process by which the agencies under each Secretary's jurisdiction shall establish and change the amounts charged for any recreation fee, including entrance fees, recreation use fees, or special recreation permit fees collected under this Act. Such guidelines shall require that the agencies coordinate with each other, to the extent practicable, when establishing or changing fees.

(b) NOTICE.—The Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, as appropriate, shall post clear notice of any entrance fee and available passes at appropriate locations within each area where a recreation fee is charged. (b) DISTRIBUTION.—(1) Eighty percent of the amounts collected at a specific unit or area shall remain available for expenditure without further appropriation, at the unit or area where the fees were collected, except that the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, as appropriate, may reduce the local allocation amount to not less than 60 percent of the fees collected if the Secretary determines that the unit or area's revenues in any specific fiscal year exceed its reasonable needs for which expenditures may be made.

(2) Amount not retained at the site or area collecting the fee shall remain available for expenditure without further appropriation to the Federal agency administering the site, for distribution in accordance with national priority needs within such agency.

(3) Revenues from the sale of annual passes shall be distributed in accordance with revenue sharing agreements developed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture.

(c) USE OF FEE REVENUES.—Amounts made available under subsection (b)(1) for expenditure at a specific unit or area shall be accounted for separately from amounts available under (b)(2). Both amounts shall be used for resource preservation, backlogged repair and maintenance projects (including projects related to health and safety), interpretation, signage, habitat for facility enhancement, law enforcement related to public use, maintenance, and direct operating or capital costs associated with the recreation fee program.

S. 2608. A bill to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 to authorize the acquisition of coastal areas in order better to ensure their protection from conversion or development; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague Senator GREGG to introduce the Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Act of 2002. I would like to thank our cosponsors, Senators KERRY, SNOWE, INOUYE, J. REED, BREAUX, CLELAND, DEWINE, SARBANES, BIDEN, KENNEDY, MIKULSKI, COCHRAN, TORRICELLI, MURRAY, and LANDRIEU for their support of this bill, which marks another important chapter of our thirty year effort to put coastal and ocean issues at the forefront of environmental policy.

When I was Governor of South Carolina over 30 years ago, I experienced first hand the need for Federal direction and assistance to the States to enable them to effectively and sustainably manage coastal development. My experiences during a series of coastal hearings and continued research in the Senate led me to write the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, which provided clear policy objectives for states to establish coordinated coastal zone management programs to help balance coastal development with protection. Since the CZMA became law, 34 of the 35 coastal states have established approved programs to help preserve and utilize their precious resources, and the program has proven to be a successful partnership between the Federal government and our states.

But we appear to need more tools to help States continue the job we started in 1972. In the year 2002, as our population grows, more and more people are moving to the coast to enjoy its beauty and recreational opportunities. In fact, by 2010, an estimated 60 percent of Americans will live along our coasts, which represent less than 17 percent of our land area. More than 3,000 people move to coastal areas everyday, and fourteen of the Nation's 20 largest cities are on the coast, and are five times more densely populated than the interior of the country. As these good folks move to take advantage of coastal living, we have to be careful that we don't destroy the natural resources and quality of life that draw them to our shores. Big changes are coming to all of our coastal counties, and we must make some careful and smart decisions if we want to keep the very resources we depend on.

In particular, estuaries and wetlands have many unique attributes that make them important to both our natural resources and our economy. Estuaries, and the watersheds that flow into them, support fisheries and wildlife and contribute immensely to the coastal area economies. Wetlands are critical to many life cycles of organisms and help improve surface water quality by filtering our wastes. But these ecologically and economically important watersheds are also under the most threat from land development and conversion away from their natural state. The Forest Service's recently released Southern Forest Resource Assessment shows that coastal urbanization trends are particularly strong in the southeastern areas. In my state alone, the natural forests of the coastal plain are projected to decrease by 1.9 million acres in the next 40 years—a 35 percent loss of South Carolina's forests. These findings and future trends tell me that for the good of our coastal communities we need some fast, targeted action to protect ecologically important coastal areas most threatened with development or conversion.

Now more than ever, the pressures of urbanization and pollution along our Nation's coasts threaten to impair watersheds, impact wildlife habitat and cause irreparable damage to the fragile coastal ecology. This year the Environmental Protection Agency rated the overall condition of our coastal waters as fair to poor, with 44 percent of estuarine areas impaired for human or aquatic life use. While some areas of the country are seeing some improvement as a result of control on industry, the experts predict that the more pristine areas like the Southeast, which as some of the best water quality in the Nation, will experience degradation of water quality due primarily to runoff of pollutants from rapid development in our coastal watersheds. This is very bad news for the shrimpers, oystermen, and recreational users who depend on these waters for their livelihood and quality of life.

We see strong signals of what continuing down this path will bring us: sustained beach closings due to excess sewage drainage; shellfish bed closings and fish consumption advisories resulting from toxic runoff or bacteria; fish kills due to lack of oxygen from nutrient runoff; marine mammal diseases; and human health impacts. The National Research Council reports that over the next 20 years over 70 percent of our estuaries will experience more of these low oxygen, or "eutrophic" conditions, such as the Gulf "Death Zone." If this trend continues, our coastal economies will suffer and perhaps never recover. I know in my state the economy would falter greatly from the lack of fishing, shrimping and tourism opportunities, and this is true up and down the Atlantic coast, which contains 37 percent of the Nation's estuarine areas.

The good news is that there are ways we can make a difference, and we have some goods models we can turn to. I am proud to say my home state of South Carolina is a leader in this area. The past decade I have led an extensive cooperative conservation effort, bringing together the State of South Carolina, private landowners, groups like the Nature Conservancy, Ducks Unlimited and Federal partners like NOAA and the Fish and Wildlife Service to protect the ACE Basin. It is now the largest pristine estuarine reserve on the East Coast, a 350,000-acre area at the convergence of the Edisto, Ashepoo and Combahee Rivers, which comprises many ecologically important habitats that are home to many fish and bird species, including a number of endangered species. An outcome of these efforts is that the ACE Basin, already home to a National Wildlife Refuge, was declared a National Estuarine Research Reserve in 1992, and has been growing in size ever since. In building the ACE Basin, the partners worked creatively and in a coordinated manner, and we successfully obtained land acquisition funds through a variety of federal sources, including the Forest Legacy Program.

What became clear, however, is that there is no federal program explicitly setting aside funding for conservation of coastal lands, where the needs are clearly the greatest. That is exactly what the Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Act of 2002 will do. The bill, which is strongly supported by The Trust for Public Land, Coastal States Organization, The Nature Conservancy and Land Trust Alliance, amends the CZMA to authorize a competitively matching grant program in NOAA to enable states to permanently protect important coastal areas. Under this NOAA program, coastal states can compete for matching funds of up to 75 percent to acquire land or easements for the protection of endangered coastal areas that have considerable conservation, recreation, ecological, historical or aesthetic values threatened by development or conversion. The bill also provides funding for a regional watershed demonstration project that can be used as a model for future watershed-scale programs. The program is authorized at $60 million for fiscal year 2003 and beyond, with an additional $5 million for the regional watershed demonstration project.

By establishing a plan for the preservation of our coastal areas, the Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Act will build on the foundation laid down by the CZMA, all in stride with the changing times, growing number of people, and limited resources available today. When it comes to the environment, rules and regulations sometimes can't do it all. Sometimes cooperative actions work better and we can turn to models that encourage joint conservation projects among folks who all want the same thing, sustainable coasts.

Partnership programs among federal government, state agencies, local governments, private landowners and nonprofits, like the ACE Basin Project, work and we need to encourage these partnerships in all our coastal areas if we are to prevent degradation of our coastal resources. The good news is that we can make a difference today by providing the funding for land conservation partnerships provided for by Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Act. I am proud to be a sponsor of this bill, which will not only improve the quality of the coastal areas and marine life it supports, but also sustain surrounding communities and their way of life.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I rise today along with Senator HOLLINGS to introduce S. 2608, the Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Act. We are introducing this much needed coastal protection act along with Senators COCHRAN, DEWINE, SNOWE, BIDEN, CARPER, CLELAND, INOUYE, BREAUX, LANDRIEU, SARBANES, MIKULSKI, KENNEDY, KERRY, TORRICELLI, and MURRAY. In addition, this legislation is supported by the Coastal States Organization, the National Estuarine Research Reserve Association, the Trust for Public Lands, The National Conservancy, and the Land Trust Alliance.

The Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Act promotes coordinated land acquisition and protection efforts in coastal and estuarine areas by fostering partnerships between non-governmental organizations and federal, state, and local governments. With Americans rapidly moving to the coast, pressures to develop critical coastal ecosystems are increasing. There are fewer and fewer undeveloped and pristine areas left in the nation's coastal and estuarine watersheds. These areas provide important nursery habitat for two-thirds of the nation's commercial fish and shellfish, provide nesting and foraging habitat for coastal birds, harbor significant natural plant communities, and serve to facilitate coastal flood control and pollutant filtration.

The Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection Act pairs willing sellers through community-based initiatives with sources of federal funds to enhance environmental protection. Lands can be acquired in full or through easements, and none of the lands purchased through this program would be held by the federal government. S. 2608 puts land conservation initiatives in the hands of state and local communities. This new program, authorized through the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration at $60,000,000 per year, would provide federal matching funds to states with approved coastal management programs or to National Estuarine Research Reserves through a competitive grant process. Federal matching funds may not exceed 75% of the cost of a project under this program, and non-federal sources may count in-kind support toward their portion of the cost share.

This coastal land protection program provides much needed support for local coastal conservation initiatives throughout the country. In my role as the Ranking Member of the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Subcommittee, I have been able to secure significant funds for the Great Bay estuary in New Hampshire. This estuary is the jewel of the seacoast region, and is home to a wide variety of plants and animal species that are particularly threatened by encroaching development and environmental pollutants. By working with local communities to purchase lands or easements on these valuable parcels of land, New Hampshire has been able to successfully conserve the natural and scenic heritage of this vital estuary.

Programs like the Coastal and Estuarine Land Protection program will now enable other states to participate in these community-based conservation efforts in coastal areas. This program was modeled after the U.S. Department of Agriculture's successful Forest Legacy Program, which has conserved millions of acres of productive and ecologically significant forest land around the country.

I welcome the opportunity to offer this important legislation, with my close friend, Senator HOLLINGS. I am thankful for his strong leadership on this issue, and look forwarding to working with him to make the vision for this legislation a reality, and to successfully conserve our ecologically, historically, recreational, and aesthetically important coastal lands.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself and Mr. SCHUMER):

S. 2609. A bill to require the Federal Trade Commission to promulgate a rule to establish requirements with respect to the release of prescriptions for contact lenses; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the Contact Lens Prescription Release Act of 2002 will rectify a troubling anomaly in competition and health care law: Eye doctors have long been required to provide patients with the prescriptions for their eyeglasses, but not for contact lenses. This bill will require ophthalmologists and optometrists to release contact lens prescriptions to their patients, just as they have long been required to do for eyeglass wearers.

Since 1973, when the Federal Trade Commission issued a regulation requiring the automatic release of eyeglass prescriptions, the millions of citizens who wear glasses have had access to, and the use of, their own prescriptions. They have long been able to "shop around" for the best provider of eyeglasses for themselves, but contact lens wearers are often forced to purchase their contacts from their eye doctors, because they have been denied possession of their own prescriptions.

The contact lens industry was in its infancy in 1973, and thus was excluded from the FTC's regulation. Now that 35 million Americans wear contact lenses, the industry is profoundly different. Thirty years ago, it made sense that the FTC did not extend its rule to cover contact lenses, but now that so many patients wear contacts, it seems the time is ripe for the law to reflect this growing health care trend. In addition, because patients' prescriptions can be exclusively held by their doctors, anticompetitive behavior among some eye doctors has escalated, to the detriment of consumers and competition.

In some instances, doctors can effectively force their patients to buy contact lenses from their doctors who can also require them to come in for eye exams before they receive replacement lenses, even if there is no change to the prescription. Patients must then pay for medical services they do not want, and cannot shop around for the best price or most convenient delivery service for their contact lens, like on-line ordering, or discount dealers. In fact, thirty-two State Attorneys General have recently settled an antitrust suit against the American Optometric Association and Johnson & Johnson, maker of ACUVUE disposable contact lenses, in which the attorneys general alleged that defendants conspired to force patients to buy their lenses only from eye doctors, and to eliminate competition from alternative distributors of contact lenses.

The Contact Lens Prescription Release Act would require the FTC to amend its trade regulation rule on ophthalmic practice to require a contact lens prescriber to release to the patient, or her agent, a copy of the prescription, and it would make it an unfair practice for any contact lens supplier to represent that the lenses could be obtained without a valid prescription. This bill would put contact lens wearers in the same position as their bespectacled brethren: They could have control of their own medical information, and be able to choose the right supplier, from a more competitive marketplace of suppliers, for themselves.

By Mr. WELLSTONE (for himself and Mr. CORZINE):

S. 2610. A bill to amend part A of title IV of the Social Security Act to include efforts to address barriers to employment as a work activity under the temporary assistance to needy families program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Chance to Succeed Act of 2002 on behalf of myself and my colleague Senator CORZINE.

The research is clear that many of the parents still receiving Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, TANF, cash assistance have barriers, often multiple barriers, that make it harder, sometime impossible, for them to work. These barriers include mental and physical impairments including learning disabilities, domestic and sexual violence, substance abuse, limited English proficiency, and hopelessness. In some cases, parents are caring for a child with disabilities and this inhibits their ability to meet the State's work requirements.

In my own State of Minnesota, we are beginning to see compelling evidence that many families receiving TANF, have significant barriers to employment. A recent study done by Lifetrack Resources looked at welfare recipients participating in a transitional jobs program. This research found that individuals participating in the program had an average of seven barriers to employment, ranging from a lack of reliable transportation to limited education to domestic violence issues. Welfare offices in Ramsey and Hennepin Counties, where the bulk of families approaching their 5 year lifetime limit live, found similar results as they have begun testing TANF recipients for learning problems, mental illness, physical limitations and other disabilities. They found that: about two-thirds of the parents in each county have problems severe enough to qualify for benefits extension; In Ramsey county, testers who have worked with several hundred parents, have found the average IQ for English speakers was 82. An IQ of 100 is considered average; and Hennepin County found that 24 percent of a sample of 66 parents reaching their time limits had a mental illness.

With additional help, many of these families in Minnesota and elsewhere, will be better able to maximize their potential and move toward greater financial independence. In order to be able to better help these families address such barriers and move toward work, States need to have in place policies and procedures that help identify these families and the barriers they face and provide them with the services and supports they will need to eventually succeed in the workplace. There is no need for these policies and procedures to be identical—one size does not fit all for states or families. But, the failure to have any such procedures results in families with barriers being inappropriately sanctioned while also unable to work. It also means that States are not using their limited TANF resources most efficiently to ensure accurate matching of families' barriers with programs to help to address those barriers. Inadequate screening and assessment impedes states' ability to better tailor their programs and the individual's responsibility plan to meet a family's needs.

Some States have already taken steps along the lines proposed in this bill. The purpose of the provisions in this bill is to put into place a skeletal structure in each State, leaving the States with flexibility in terms of exactly how the various provisions are implemented, will help to ensure that both states and families have the tools they need to ultimately ensure that more low-income families succeed in the workplace. The Chance to Succeed Act encourages states to better serve the needs of TANF recipients with barriers to employment by: giving states broad flexibility to place TANF recipients in barrier-removal activities and count recipients participating in such activities toward federal work participation rates for at least three months; improving service delivery for families with barriers by developing a screening, assessment and service delivery process; providing technical assistance to states to develop model practices, standards and procedures for screening, assessment and addressing barriers to move individuals into employment; and providing funding for state-level advisory panels to improve state policies and procedures for assisting families with barriers to work; helping TANF recipients with barriers to employment move into the workforce by creating personal responsibility plans that outline an employment goal for moving an individual into stable employment; the obligations of the individual to work toward becoming and remaining employed in the private sector; the individual's long-term career goals and the specific work experience, education, or training needed to reach them; and the services the State will offer based on screening and assessment; and developing sanction, conciliation and follow-up procedures that address barriers and improve compliance.

TANF recipients want to work and be able to provide for themselves and their children. To be poor in this country is difficult enough, but to be poor and on welfare carries with it a stigma that makes life nearly impossible. States like Minnesota and others are only now coming to understand the true depth and extent of the kinds of barriers to employment that many TANF recipients face. It takes a tremendous commitment of effort and resources to provide individuals with the services and supports they need to address these barriers so that they may successfully transition into the workforce. It is critical that our federal TANF policies do all that is possible to help those states that are already making this kind of commitment. I believe this bill does just that, and I urge each of my colleagues to support it. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Finance Committee and others to ensure that the provisions in this bill are included in the Senate TANF reauthorization bill.

By Mr. REED (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. FRIST, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. CHAFEE, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. WELLSTONE):

S. 2611. A bill to reauthorize the Museum and Library Services Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, today I introduce the Museum and Library Services Act of 2002. I am pleased to be joined by Senators KENNEDY, COLLINS, JEFFORDS, FRIST, COCHRAN, LEVIN, CHAFEE, LANDRIEU, and DAYTON in introducing this legislation to strengthen museum and library services.

Museums and libraries are rich centers of learning, woven into the fabric of our communities, big and small, urban and rural.

Today's library is not simply a place where books are read and borrowed. It is a place where a love for reading is born and renewed again and again, and where information is sought and discovered. American libraries also coordinate and provide comprehensive services to meet the needs of their communities and people of all ages. They provide Internet access, family literacy classes, homework help, mentoring programs, English as A Second Language, ESL, classes, job training, and resume writing workshops.

America's museums bring wonderment and joy to young and old alike, encouraging discovery and celebrating our heritage and our heroes. Today's museums bring everyday objects, art, music, science, technology, and much more to life. Museums help us preserve our past, understand our present, and plan our future.

The Federal Government has a long history of supporting our Nation's libraries and museums, providing direct aid to public libraries since the adoption of the Library Services and Construction Act, LSCA, in 1956 and funding to museums since the enactment of the Museum Services Act in 1976.

The Museum and Library Services Act was enacted in 1996, reauthorizing federal library and museum programs under a newly created, independent federal agency called the Institute for Museum and Library Services, IMLS. The Museum and Library Services Act consists of two main subtitles, the Library Services and Technology Act and the Museum Services Act. Senator Kennedy, Senator Jeffords, and my predecessor, former Senator Claiborne Pell, were instrumental in the development and enactment of this law.

Under the Library Services and Technology Act, LSTA, IMLS funds four grant programs for libraries to improve access to information through technology, to ensure equity of access and to help bring resources to underserved audiences. These programs serve all types of our nation's 122,000 libraries: public, academic, research, school, and archive.

In Rhode Island, LSTA funding allows libraries to provide summer reading programs for students and participate in the Rhode Island Family Literacy Initiative that helps families with limited English language skills. Last fall, the Providence Public Library was one of 6 museums and libraries recognized by IMLS with a National Award for Museum and Library Service.

Under the Museum Service Act, IMLS provides funding and technical assistance to museums for preservation of museum collections, new technologies for exhibits, and general operations. Approximately 15,000 U.S. museums from aquariums to arboretums and botanical gardens, to art museums, to historic houses and sites, to nature centers, to science and technology centers, to zoological parks benefit from the IMLS's existence. Several Rhode Island museums have received IMLS funding, including the Children's Museum of Rhode Island, the Museum of Art at the Rhode Island School of Design, and the Slater Mill Historic Site in Pawtucket.

The legislation we are introducing today is based on the testimony we heard at an April 10 hearing of the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee, which I chaired, as well as proposals that the museum and library communities each crafted using a cooperative and collaborative process. We are grateful for their efforts to come together on proposals so the law meets the future needs of museum and library users.

The Museum and Library Services Act of 2002, which extends the authorization of museum and library services for six years, makes several important modifications to current law. The bill ensures that library activities are coordinated with the school library program I authored and contained within the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001. It establishes a Museum and Library Services Board to advise the Director of IMLS, and it authorizes IMLS to award a National Award for Library Service as well as a National Award for Museum Service. The bill also ensures a portion of administrative funds are used to analyze annually the impact of museum and library services to identify needs and trends of services provided under museum and library programs, and it establishes a reservation of 1.75 percent of funds for museum services for Native Americans (a similar reservation is currently provided for library services under the Library Services and Technology subtitle). Lastly, the bill updates the uses of funds for library and museum programs, and it increases the authorization of LSTA from $150 million to $350 million and Museum Services from $28.7 million to $65 million.

I want to specifically highlight one other provision in the legislation. The Museum and Library Services Act of 2002 doubles the minimum State allotment under the Library Services and Technology Act to $680,000. The minimum State allotment has remained flat at $340,000 since 1971, hampering the literacy and cultural efforts of our Nation's smaller states. An analysis prepared by the staff of the Joint Economic Committee shows that it would take $1.5 million for our small States to keep pace with inflation. The library community has instead suggested a modest, but essential doubling of the minimum State allotment to $680,000. This will enable every State to benefit and implement the valuable services and programs that larger States have been able to put in place. We heard about the importance of this change from David Macksam, Director of the Cranston Public Library, during the April 10 hearing. I will be fighting to retain this provision as we work with the House to put this legislation on the President's desk for his signature.

The House Committee on Education and the Workforce has already taken action on a reauthorization bill. Last year, during the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA), I was pleased to work with Senator Collins, Chairman Kennedy, and others to secure funding for school libraries for the first time in twenty years. I hope we can also move forward on a similar bipartisan basis on a swift reauthorization of the Museum and Library Services Act.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation and work for its passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this legislation be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

By Mr. REID (for himself and Mr. ENSIGN):

S. 2612. A bill to establish wilderness areas, promote conservation, improve public land and provide for high quality development in Clark County, Nevada, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, today I rise with my good friend Senator ENSIGN to introduce a bill that is important to Las Vegas, important to Clark County, important to Nevada, and important to America. The Clark County Conservation of Public Land and Natural Resources Act of 2002, known as the Clark County Conservation PLAN, provides a solution for southern Nevada's growth and conservation challenges.

The Clark County Conservation PLAN balances the needs for infrastructure development, recreational opportunities, and conservation of our precious natural resources in southern Nevada.

Our bill is a broad-based compromise. We do not expect everyone to advocate every provision of this bill. Indeed, we know that many people will oppose various components of our legislation. The complaints we receive will reflect the tendency for people to fear change, protect the status quo, and miss the forest for the trees in this case, the Joshua trees.

Before I discuss each title of the Clark County Conservation PLAN, I will take a few moments to describe the profound challenge that public land issues pose for Nevada. 87 percent of the land in Nevada, that is nearly 9 out of every 10 acres in our State, is owned and managed by the Federal Government. This includes land managed by the U.S. Forest Service, the Bureau of Reclamation, the Bureau of Land Management, the Department of Energy, the National Park Service, the Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Army, the U.S. Navy, and the U.S. Air Force.

The Secretaries of Interior, Agriculture, Defense and Energy bear tremendous responsibilities for the management, development, and conservation of natural resources in Nevada. Unlike most of America where land use decisions are made by communities, in Nevada, many land use decisions require concurrence of Federal officials and, in some cases, the passage of Federal laws. This is a circumstance that very few Senators understand from experience, but I know that my colleagues can imagine the tremendous challenge inherent in this system regardless of the State they represent.

The challenge of Federal land ownership is not unique to Nevada, in fact it characterizes much of the West. However, this situation is compounded in Clark County where the fastest growing population in America springs from the heart of one of the most extreme and fragile regions in North America, the Mojave Desert.

Many people believe that this scenario embodies an impossible challenge. Some believe that guiding growth in Southern Nevada and protecting our desert for future generations are mutually exclusive. Some believe that protecting our air and water quality and setting aside some open space as wilderness are overly costly barriers to growth that unnecessarily restrict recreation and development. Some believe that the Federal Government's management of public land is too strict; others believe it is too lenient. Some believe that every acre of Clark County should be privatized. Some believe that not a single acre more should be auctioned from the public domain. As different as these views are, what they have in common is that they are passionately held by Nevadans.

By describing the fundamental context within which Senator ENSIGN and I are working, I hope I have demonstrated why compromise is not just necessary but warranted. We fully expect to be criticized for what this bill is not, for example it does not designate all of the 2 million acres in Clark County that the Nevada Wilderness Coalition advocates nor does it release all the wilderness study areas in Nevada as others advocate. We do not need to apologize for this compromise, rather we will advocate for what it is, a fair-minded, forward-looking framework for the future development and protection of public land in Clark County.

The Clark County Conservation PLAN reflects three complementary goals: 1. Enhancing our quality of life; 2. Protecting our environment for our children and grandchildren; and 3. Making public land available for quality development consistent with these two principles.

The remainder of my statement today will explain how the Clark County Conservation PLAN will improve the quality of life and enhance economic opportunities for Nevadans while enriching and protecting the awe-inspiring natural resources that bless southern Nevada for the benefit of future generations of Nevadans and all Americans.

When Congress passed the Southern Nevada Public Lands Management Act in 1998, we made the decision that it was in the public interest to transition away from Federal-private land exchanges and competitively auction those parcels of land deemed by the BLM to be disposable. This decision has proven to be quite effective and fair and likely represents the future of land privatization in Nevada and the West. However, at the time the law was enacted, Congress did contemplate that a limited number of ongoing land exchanges would be completed. One of these exchanges is familiarly known as the Red Rock Canyon Howard Hughes exchange. This exchange would be completed by Title I of the Clark County Conservation PLAN.

In the Red Rock Exchange, the Bureau of Land Management will acquire roughly 1,070 acres of land owned by the Howard Hughes Corporation. This land forms promontories above the gently-sloping bajada in the foothills of the La Madre Mountains on the western border of the Red Rock Canyon National Conservation Area. This acreage affords spectacular views of the Las Vegas Valley but development there would degrade the Red Rock NCA and diminish the beauty of the view from Las Vegas to the west, a view many Las Vegans treasure.

This bill provides that the lands I have described will become part of the Red Rock NCA once acquired by the federal government. In exchange for the Red Rock lands, the Howard Hughes Corporation will receive acreage of equal value, as determined by a government-certified appraiser, within the Las Vegas Valley. Finally, the Howard Hughes Corporation will convey some of their acquired acreage to Clark County for use as a county park and for inclusion in a regional trail system. As I mentioned earlier, this proposal has been around for a number of years and enjoys unusually broad support ranging from the County to the environmental community. The time when this exchange should have reached completion through the administrative process has long since passed and a legislative resolution is now in order.

Nevada has nearly 100 wilderness study areas on Federal land across the State. These areas, which are primarily owned by the Bureau of Land Management, are managed to protect wilderness character of the lands under current law. These areas remain as de facto wilderness until Congress passes a bill changing wilderness study status by either designating the land as wilderness or releasing the land from wilderness study area consideration.

Although there is broad support for addressing Nevada's wilderness study areas through federal legislation, there is no consensus regarding how to do so. Those who advocate for wilderness designation and those who oppose further additions to the wilderness system hold strong and, in many cases, irreconcilable views on this issue.

Those of us who wrote this bill likewise hold different views regarding wilderness. In developing the wilderness component of this bill, Senator ENSIGN, Congressman GIBBONS and I made compromises that will likely cause heartburn for all interested parties. We believe, however, that this is a critical step toward addressing the outstanding wilderness study issues in the state of Nevada. Our bill designates wilderness and releases wilderness study areas. It creates 20 wilderness areas: 6 managed by the BLM; 4 jointly managed by the Park Service and BLM; 7 managed by the Park Service; and 3 jointly managed by the BLM and the Forest Service

In addition to the wilderness described earlier, our bill releases from wilderness study area status acreage associated with each of the BLM and forest service areas we address. In fact, we release three BLM study areas in their entirety. Two of these areas will eventually accommodate growth at the north end of the Las Vegas Valley and help provide jobs for decades into the future. These lands might be conservatively valued at about $1 billion.

We have provided for wilderness management protocols that address the particular circumstances of southern Nevada. For example, we explicitly require the Secretary of the Interior to allow for the construction, maintenance and replacement of water catchments known as guzzlers when and where that action will enhance wilderness wildlife resources. In addition, we believe that the use of motor vehicles should be allowed to achieve these purposes when there is no reasonable alternative and it does not require the creation of new roads.

Some wilderness purists argue that these man-made guzzler tanks disturb the naturally functioning ecosystems of the Mojave Desert. I respect this view, but I believe that these water projects actually help restore more natural function to ecosystems that have been forever fragmented by development including roads. These projects which are privately funded by dedicated sportsmen have a legitimate place in southern Nevada wilderness and this bill is clear on that point.

In our effort to create a fair wilderness designation, we have benefitted from the advice and suggestions of many Nevadans representing a range of views. These advocates include the Nevada Land Users Coalition, The Sierra Club, The Virgin Valley Sportsmen's Association, The Nevada Wilderness Project, The Fraternity of Desert Bighorns, the Nevada Mining Association, Red Rock Audubon, and Partners in Conservation, to name just a few. We appreciate their help and believe that this compromise honors our commitment to listen carefully to all parties. We are also grateful for the help we have received from the Federal land managers in Clark County and look forward to working with them to improve this bill to help make their jobs easier and the public experience on public land better.

Early in the development of this bill we decided not to address wilderness issues within the Desert National Wildlife Range. I recognize that this is a major disappointment to many in the environmental community who view the wilderness resources in the Range as some of the best in the Mojave Desert. Wilderness in the Range is, however, beyond the scope of this bill.

The Clark County Conservation PLAN does transfer the management responsibility of three wilderness study areas, totaling more than 49,000 acres, from the Bureau of Land Management to the Fish and Wildlife Service. These areas lie between State Highway 93 and the Range so this transfer helps rationalize the federal land ownership pattern in northern Clark County.

In addition, this bill transfers a small parcel of land from the Bureau of Land Management to the National Park Service for use as an administrative site on the road between Searchlight and Cottonwood Cove. This transfer will save taxpayer dollars by allowing the Park Service to consolidate two planned administrative sites into one and manage the Lake Mead National Recreation Area more effectively.

When Congress passed the Southern Nevada Public Lands Management Act of 1998, it established a new paradigm for the sale of public lands in Clark County, Nevada. One of the core principles of this new way of doing business was that the proceeds from the sale of Federal lands should be reinvested in federal, state, and local environmental protection and recreational enhancements in the state in which the lands are sold.

The Clark County Conservation PLAN Act modifies the Southern Nevada Public Lands Management Act and expands the so-called Las Vegas valley disposal boundary. This expansion will make an additional 25,000 acres of BLM land available for auction and development years into the future. The proceeds from the sale of this Federal land will continue to accrue to the Southern Nevada Public Lands Special Account and be invested in the purchase of environmentally sensitive land, the development of Federal land infrastructure, the implementation of the Clark County Multi-Species Habitat Conservation Plan, and local government open space, recreation and conservation projects. Our bill further provides that at least one-quarter of the Special Account be dedicated to the last of these purposes.

One of the most important infrastructure issues facing southern Nevada is siting a new international airport. The County's preferred and likely site is in a dry lake bed between Jean and Primm, Nevada south of the Las Vegas Valley in the Interstate 15 transportation corridor near the California border. Congress made federal land at that site available for use as an airport, pending environmental reviews.

The Clark County Conservation PLAN complements that law in two important ways. First, our bill conveys federal land adjacent to the proposed airport to the Clark County Airport Authority so that it can promote compatible development within the area impacted by the noise of the airport. Any proceeds derived from sale of these Airport Authority lands would be distributed similarly to lands sold within the Las Vegas Valley Disposal Boundary.

Second, our bill directs the Bureau of Land Management to reserve a right-of-way for non-exclusive utility and transportation corridors between the Las Vegas valley and the proposed airport. This corridor is important because for the new airport to remain economical will require significant utility development to come from the north. Our bill does not dictate exactly where, when, how, or by whom this infrastructure will be developed; it simply reserves land explicitly to serve this purpose.

One of the most precious areas in southern Nevada is a relatively nondescript canyon near Henderson. It is an area graced with hundreds of wonderful and curious petroglyphs. Under ordinary circumstances, I would not reveal the location of this site because public knowledge of prehistoric rock art sites commonly leads to their destruction. In this case, however, this canyon is in desperate need of protection because it is within a short walk of the Las Vegas valley. Similar resources elsewhere in the desert Southwest have been destroyed by urban growth and lack of intensive management.

The Clark County Conservation PLAN designates the Sloan petroglyphs site and the area that comprises most of its watershed as the North McCullough Mountains Wilderness. This wilderness combined with about 32,000 acres of open space comprises the proposed Sloan Canyon National Conservation Area. The NCA and wilderness will provide critical protection for the Sloan petroglyphs, preserve open space near Henderson's rapidly growing neighborhoods and together represent a legacy of cultural and natural resource conservation our grandchildren will value dearly one day.

The sheer number of public lands bill requests Senator ENSIGN and I receive is staggering. If we chose to introduce stand-alone legislation to address each legitimate issue that constituents bring to our attention, we would create an awkward patchwork of new Federal laws. In the Clark County Conservation PLAN, we have attempted to provide a comprehensive vision and framework for conservation and development in southern Nevada by balancing competing interests.

The final title of our bill includes a select few of the many important public interest land conveyances. For example, we include two land grants to further the higher education mission of Nevada's university system. One provides land to the UNLV research foundation for the development of a technology park. The other provides land for the planned Henderson State College.

We convey a small active shooting range to the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department for training purposes. We grant a modest parcel of land to the City of Las Vegas for the development of affordable housing. We provide for the conveyance of the Sunrise Landfill from the Bureau of Land Management to Clark County pending completion of the environmental clean-up at the site. We convey park and open space land to the City of Henderson and provide for a cooperatively managed zone comprised of federal land around Henderson Executive airport. These are relatively small but important actions that help our communities, law enforcement, and educational system better serve southern Nevada.

The Clark County Conservation PLAN Act that Senator ENSIGN and I introduce today promises a better tomorrow for our public lands in southern Nevada, for the more than 1.5 million people who call Clark County home, and for the millions of Americans who visit southern Nevada every year. This constructive compromise provides land for development, land grants for public purposes, wilderness for conservation in perpetuity, and a new national conservation area to celebrate and protect the wonderful natural and cultural resources of the North McCullough Mountains including the Sloan petroglyph site.

Senator ENSIGN and I have been working on this bill since he came to the Senate a year and a half ago. We are proud of the progress we've made together and with Congressman GIBBONS and believe that this public lands bill should serve as a model for bipartisan cooperation and constructive compromise. We look forward to working with Chairman BINGAMAN and the Energy and Natural Resources Committee to perfect this bill so that we can enact the Clark County Conservation PLAN into law this year.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, today it is a great privilege and honor for me to introduce the Clark County Conservation of Public Land and Natural Resources Act of 2002 with my good friend and colleague from Nevada, Senator HARRY REID.

The introduction of this legislation today is the culmination of over a year of work. We held public forums in Clark County to solicit the input of interested parties. My staff spent many hours with local government officials, the environmental community, multiple-use groups, utility providers, home developers, sportsmen, and other Nevadans to reach a compromise on how we tackle the tough issues we face in Clark County. While it is a daunting job to bring Nevadans with opposing perspectives together on the controversial topic of wilderness, I believe we have achieved a consensus that is good for all citizens in Clark County. We will look back 30 years from now and realize how this legislation contributed to the quality of life we cherish in southern Nevada.

Because the Federal government manages 87 percent of the land in Nevada, the federal presence imposes enormous barriers to land use planning in a state that, again, outpaces every other state in population growth. I know I speak for many Nevadans when I say that we wish we did not have so much federal land within our borders. But the reality is that we do, and that this legislation is necessary to plan for growth and to set aside our pristine lands for future generations to enjoy and visit. In many states, land use planning takes place in city council chambers. We do not have that luxury, as we have to obtain the consent of the Congress to make some of the most basic decisions. Despite those obstacles, Senator REID and I are putting forward legislation that is a model for fast-growing communities struggling to balance the equally important goals of environmental protection, planned residential and business development, and the allocation of scarce resources such as water.

One of my proudest achievements during my service in the U.S. House of Representatives was the enactment of the Southern Nevada Public Land Management Act, or what is probably better known in Nevada as the Ensign-Bryan bill. Like the legislation Senator REID and I are introducing today, the Ensign-Bryan bill was the product of bipartisan cooperation and the spirit of inclusion. Senator Bryan, who deserves much credit for that landmark measure, and I hosted a public lands task force to identify and propose solutions to the unique problems we faced in the Las Vegas Valley. One of the major reforms that came about because of the Ensign-Bryan bill was the change in the way public land is disposed of in the Las Vegas Valley. We drew a disposal boundary around the valley and asked the Bureau of Land Management to auction the land to the highest bidder, in consultation with local governments. The proceeds of those land auctions millions of dollars have been going into a special fund to build parks and trails, acquire environmentally sensitive land, initiate capital improvements in our beautiful recreation and conservations areas, and maintain the Clark County Multi-Species Habitat Conservation Plan. We also allocated funds for water infrastructure and to the general education fund of the State of Nevada. This legislation continues to encourage orderly growth, improves the environment, and benefits the schoolchildren of Nevada.

Federal land has become so valuable because of the infrastructure installed by private developers, local governments, and the taxpayers of Nevada. It is because of the phenomenal growth in southern Nevada that public land auctions have brought in millions of dollars. Eighty-five percent of the proceeds from public land auctions in southern Nevada are reinvested in environmental projects. So, I would challenge those who claim that the federal government is not getting its fair share of the proceeds from land sales. In fact, the federal government is receiving large sums of money because of the value-added infrastructure supported by Nevadans.

In the Clark County Conservation of Public Lands and Natural Resources Act, we build upon the Southern Nevada Public Lands Management Act and settle a number of wilderness designations that have been pending since 1991. This bill designates 224,000 acres of BLM wilderness while it releases 231,000 acres of wilderness study areas. In the jurisdiction of the National Park Service adjacent to the Colorado River and Lake Mead, 184,000 acres of wilderness are designated. In all, 444,000 acres in Clark County will be added to our national wilderness preservation system. While the acreage is more than supported by a coalition of multiple-use advocates in Nevada, the acreage is about one-fifth of the amount requested by the Friends of Nevada Wilderness. This compromise is fair.

I am particularly proud that the bill creates a second National Conservation Area in southern Nevada, the Sloan Canyon National Conservation Area. Having such a magnificent resource at the edge of the City of Henderson will provide countless new recreation opportunities for those residents and provide open space that is so important to the quality of life in the Las Vegas Valley. I am happy we were able to improve the existing Red Rock National Conservation Area by adding pristine land to the NCA held by the Howard Hughes Corporation.

An important feature of this legislation I worked to include is the creation of a comprehensive Southern Nevada Litter Cleanup Campaign. As is the case in many desert communities, there is unfortunately a prevalence of discarded trash along our highways and on tracts of vacant BLM land within city limits. We must instill an ethic in our community and sense of awareness that we cannot continue to treat our desert lands as garbage dumps. While I attended college in Oregon, I saw how effective the "Keep Oregon Green" campaign worked. I am certain the same approach can produce results in southern Nevada, and that it can be accomplished through the leadership of volunteers, civic organizations, environmental groups, and private industry, without the bureaucracy. I look forward to leaving to my children a community that is much cleaner than the one we have today.

I worked to include protections in the Clark County Conservation of Public Land and Natural Resources so that existing access in wilderness is preserved. In addition to reserving motorized access through cherry-stemmed roads on maps referred to in the bill, we make it clear that reasonable access to water developments is permitted in wilderness areas. Groups such as the Fraternity of the Big Horn Sheep provide critical water to ensure the health of big horn sheep populations in southern Nevada. Of course, all valid existing rights are honored including grazing and mining. Buffers of at least 100 along each side of the road are preserved. We also authorize fire suppression and climatological data collection. All in all, reasonable access to wilderness has been achieved and I am especially appreciative of Senator REID's flexibility in addressing the concerns of multiple-use groups in this regard.

This legislation ensures Clark County's orderly growth over the next several decades through the establishment of educational and research institutions, industrial parks, and residential development. The original disposal boundary defined in the Ensign-Bryan Act has been expanded to accommodate planned growth in Clark County, the City of Las Vegas, the City of North Las Vegas, and the City of Henderson. We have some of the finest planned communities in the world in southern Nevada and I know that the new lands will be showcases for quality living for a broad spectrum of Nevadans. The bill sets aside land for the Clark County Department of Aviation for the development of the Ivanpah Airport south of Las Vegas, the only major international airport in the United States that will be constructed from scratch in the next ten years. And very importantly, we have opened up an energy corridor that will augment Nevada's and the Southwest's electricity needs.

I also wanted to mention the Clark County Multi-Species Habitat Conservation Plan. As the home to many threatened species, Clark County has entered into an agreement with the Fish and Wildlife Service so that the rapid growth we have been experiencing does not destroy critical plant and animal habitats. Senator REID and I have included language to ensure that the MSHCP is not revoked when releasing lands from wilderness study status. However, the agreement Senator REID and I reached does not mean that lands will be unavailable for multiple-use in the future; we wanted to give Clark County and the Fish and Wildlife Service the flexibility they need to amend the MSHCP as circumstances warrant, particularly as this legislation is implemented.

Senator REID and I went through a spirited campaign for the U.S. Senate against each other in 1998. It was a very close race and I conceded it by 428 votes. Our friendship is now strong, and I believe that this bill is a testament to the fact that legislators from different political perspectives can come together for the good of their state. It is not easy work to bridge philosophical differences, but it can and must be done for the sake of the people we represent.

I would like to thank Congressman JIM GIBBONS for his support of this measure in the U.S. House of Representatives. Congressman GIBBONS was an active participant in the development of this bill, and he offered several constructive and good changes to its content. I appreciate very much his guidance and assistance.

Finally, I would like to thank members of my staff who worked hard on the development of this bill here in Washington and in Nevada: John Lopez, Margot Allen, Julene Haworth, and Mac Bybee are talented Nevadans who care very much about Clark County and our great state. I also appreciate the input and assistance of Clint Bentley, the tireless organizer of the Nevada Land Users Coalition. Clint was an articulate and reasoned advocate of multiple use principles and ensured that the Nevada Land Users Coalition spoke with one voice during these negotiations.

I look forward to quick passage of the Clark County Conservation of Public Lands and Natural Resources in the 107th Congress.

PROGRAM

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as I indicated, tomorrow we believe Senator DORGAN will lay down an amendment at 12:30. That would mean that debate would culminate at about 2:30 tomorrow afternoon, at which time we would have a vote on his amendment, the second-degree amendment, and the Conrad amendment. Following that, unless there is some other amendment, the Senator from Texas would lay down his amendment, and that would mean at approximately 5:15 or 5:30 we would vote on his amendment. We hope to complete this legislation tomorrow evening sometime.

The majority leader will make a determination as to what we will move to. That would be good because it is Thursday. I know he has been working with the Senator from Kansas to come up with an agreement to move forward on the cloning, stem cell legislation. That would allow us to hopefully complete that matter the following day. We have a lot of work to do.

Hopefully, on Friday we can even do something that is constructive in nature and complete more legislation.

The majority leader indicated on the floor today that prior to the July 4 recess, he will move to the defense authorization bill. That is a very difficult bill, as we know. There are a lot of amendments always. So that will take a good part of the legislative week. So there is a lot of work to do and little time to do it.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO ESCORT THE HONORABLE JOHN HOWARD, PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint a committee on the part of the Senate to join a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to escort the Honorable John Howard, Prime Minister of Australia, into the House Chamber for a joint meeting on Wednesday, June 12, 2002.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I believe there is no further business to come before the Senate. That being the case, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:14 p.m., adjourned until Wednesday, June 12, 2002, at 9:30 a.m.

WASHINGTON, DC,
June 11, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN BOOZMAN to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4775. An act making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 4775) "An Act making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House agreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints

MORNING HOUR DEBATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to not to exceed 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) for 5 minutes.

REPUBLICAN PRESCRIPTION DRUG PLAN

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Here we go again, Mr. Speaker. Americans are still paying two and three and four times more for their prescription drugs than consumers in any other nation in the world. Twelve million seniors lack any form of prescription drug coverage, and millions more have inadequate coverage.

My Republican friends are poised to introduce prescription drug legislation that does not address either of these concerns. That is because the goal of their legislation is not to deliver meaningful prescription drug benefits to seniors or get a grip on unjustifiably high prices. Their goals are, one, to try to look responsive to the concerns of senior voters and their families, without actually investing enough to be responsive to their concerns; second, to do the bidding of the prescription drug industry, which is what my Republican friends always do; and, third, to privatize Medicare, the best health care system this country has ever seen.

How do they win political points? By mimicking some of the features of a real drug benefit but investing only about one-third of the dollars needed to deliver real drug coverage. By starting with 80 percent coverage, which makes their plan look generous, then increasing the cost-sharing, the cost that seniors actually pay, dramatically as a senior's prescription drug price costs rise. Under the Republican plan, seniors who spend more than $2,000 lose their coverage altogether, no more coverage for the next $2,500 in expenses. Find me a single health insurance plan in the private sector that increases the cost-sharing burden as an enrollee's costs go up.

The Republican plan is so skeletal that seniors would still need supplemental prescription drug coverage if they wanted protection against high drug prices. The majority may dress up their plan in appealing rhetoric, but it is still a cheap imitation of real prescription drug coverage.

The Republicans' second goal is to do the bidding, no surprise here, of the prescription drug industry which, of course, favors the private plan approach. Remember the Flo ads from a couple years back, the ones where Flo said she did not want the government in her medicine cabinet? Those ads were funded by the drug industry. They were intended to demonize the idea of adding a drug benefit to the existing Medicare program. The drug industry favors bypassing Medicare and forcing seniors into private prescription drug plans.

Be prepared for the majority to claim its plan cuts drug prices by 30 percent per prescription. The Republican plan does not cut drug prices by 30 percent, in spite of what they say. Their plan reduces drug spending, not prices, and they do that mostly by restricting seniors' access to higher priced necessary medicines.

They are not doing seniors any favors with that strategy, and they certainly are not challenging their corporate sponsors, the drug industry's ugly habit of charging American consumers the highest prices in the world for drugs our tax dollars, our research, our NIH helped produce.

I recently received a letter from a constituent who last year took a bus and purchased his medicines in Canada. He said the only side effect from those drugs was that he saved $2,000. Same medicines, same quality, $2,000 less. The savings is significantly more than most seniors would save by signing up for the Republican prescription drug plan.

The second goal of my Republican colleagues is not to rock the boat when it comes to drug industry pricing. Never upset the prescription drug company, one of their biggest contributors.

The third goal is to privatize Medicare. The Republican prescription drug plan not only bypasses Medicare by promoting private prescription drug plans, it would phase out Medicare as an entitlement and phase in a privatized, defined contribution program. Medicare beneficiaries would receive a voucher to cover part of the cost of the private insurance. Wealthier citizens would supplement that voucher to get better coverage. Lower income seniors will just have to take what they get.

If the majority want to end the Medicare entitlement and abandon the principles that all Medicare beneficiaries, everyone in this country over the age of 65, are entitled to good health care coverage, they should not hide behind prescription drug coverage to do that. They should say, yes, we want to privatize Medicare.

I am working with other interested Members on legislation that adds a real prescription drug benefit to Medicare, that harnesses the collective purchasing power of Medicare beneficiaries to drive drug prices down, which is what other countries, especially Canada, do to get lower drug prices and that does not use prescription drug coverage as their method to privatize Medicare.

We are the richest country in the world. We owe our prosperity to the retirees who built this country. If we can afford trillion dollar tax cuts, which my friend, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS), will talk about in a moment, if we can afford trillion dollar tax cuts that go overwhelmingly to the richest people in this country, we sure can afford a real drug benefit for our seniors.

Let us not trivialize the concerns of Medicare beneficiaries and every American by sugarcoating paltry coverage plans. The American public hired us to address their concerns, not to co-opt them. Let us, for a change in this body, do our job.

TAX LIMITATION AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I was not going to comment on the speech of the previous speaker, but since he mentioned my name, I will say that the plan that he is proposing is basically a new government program operating out of HCFA, which is the government body that administers this program for prescription drugs. What Republicans want to do is provide a drug program like we, as Members of Congress and the Senate and the President, have. It is patterned after the Federal Employee Health Benefit program, which is a private program. So the whole gist of what he is saying comes down to a new government agency versus a program similar to the one Members of Congress have. I really think the people of America, our constituents, would like to have the same health care I have, the same prescription drug program I have, and not a new government program.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman mentioned, I am here to talk about the Permanent Death Tax Repeal Act this body passed. Actually, Mr. Speaker, we have passed 22 tax cuts bills for the 107th Congress. Now some of these tax cuts were not passed by the Senate, were not signed by the President, but we passed all of these in the House, for example, foster care. We had a tax credit for foster care. We had an adoption tax credit. We had a tax credit in the energy bill. We had a tax credit for victims of terrorism. We had a tax cut for pension plans. The Marriage Penalty Relief Tax Acceleration Act was passed on May 21 of this year. We had an adoption tax credit and we had Holocaust victims tax credits.

Mr. Speaker, all of these 22 tax cut bills passed by the House are as follows:

Prepared by the Office of the House Majority Leader, 6/4/02

Mr. Speaker, there is no greater defining principle of our party than letting taxpayers keep what they earn. Time and time again we have shown tax relief is good policy and good politics. As we debate these bills, we have the opportunity to reflect on our Nation's Byzantine tax code and the problem it imposes on the American taxpayers.

This week, Mr. Speaker, we will be considering important and meaningful legislation to address a shortcoming in our tax system. Adopting the tax limitation amendment would require prospective tax increases to achieve a two-thirds vote which means it will be more difficult to have a recurrence of one of the largest tax increases passed in 1993. Our Founding Fathers had the foresight to mandate a two-thirds majority vote on certain priorities issues. The fourth President of the United States, James Madison, a central figure in the development of the Constitution and a vocal supporter of majority rule, argued that the greatest threat to liberty and Republic came from unrestrained majority rule. And that is why they proposed a two-thirds majority for conviction in impeachment trials, expulsion of a Member of Congress, and to override a presidential veto, quorum of two-thirds in the Senate to elect a President, consent to a treaty and proposing a constitutional amendment.

Daniel Webster, a great Member of this body, said, "The power to tax is a power to destroy." Americans are simply taxed too much. The total tax burden is the highest since World War II. We have the Federal income tax, the payroll tax, the gasoline tax, various other Federal excise taxes, finally, State and local taxes. Wherever we turn, we can expect to pay a tax on something. Americans are paying taxes and at the same time they are trying to pay off their debt. They have mortgages, auto loans, credit card debt and school loans.

Americans also face the cost of complying with this tax code. According to the Tax Foundation, businesses and nonprofit corporations as well as individuals will spend an estimated 5.8 billion hours complying with the Federal income Tax Code, with an estimated compliance cost of almost $200 billion. This amounts to imposing a 20.4 cent tax compliance charge for every dollar the income tax system collects.

Raising taxes comes all too easy for certain people here in Congress. It is the simplest solution for those who have affinity for increased spending around here. But this week we have the opportunity to make it harder to raise taxes. In this country supreme power resides in a body of citizens entitled to vote and is exercised by elected officials like ourselves and representatives responsible to them according to the law.

By passing the tax limitation amendment, we adhere to this definition of a Republic by requiring two-thirds of the Members, best representing the views of their constituents, to vote in favor of raising taxes.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of H.J. Res. 96 when it comes to the House floor to show our appreciation and to follow the mandates of a good Republic.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG BENEFIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the need for a Medicare prescription drug benefit and particularly point out the failures of the Republican leadership in this House as well as the President in that they are not addressing this issue. They are not bringing up the prescription drug benefit. I was interested in hearing what the previous speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS), said about how the Republicans wanted every American or every senior to have the same kind of package that Congressmen have.

Well, I have no evidence of that. So far the Republican leadership has talked about bringing up a prescription drug bill for about 2 months in a steady drumbeat that is going to happen this week, it is going to happen next week, it is going to happen next month; and we have no bill. And the suggestions we have seen about what kind of bill they are going to come out with is basically privatizing Medicare so that there is no guaranteed benefit at all. So when my colleague suggests that somehow seniors under the Republican bill are going to get the same kind of benefit that Congressmen have, there is no indication of that whatsoever from the Republican leadership. I have not seen anything to suggest that.

Let me say now, once again, I think many of my colleagues know that just before the Memorial Day recess we were told by the Republican leadership in the House that they were going to bring up a prescription drug bill for seniors. It was going to go to committee 2 weeks before the Memorial Day recess. It was going to come to the floor the week before the Memorial Day recess. It never happened. They came back after the Memorial Day recess. We had a week already that we were in session and they said we will bring up the bill this week. Then they said we will bring up the bill next week. Yesterday I heard that they were going to bring up the bill or announce the bill this coming Thursday. No bill yet. I have not seen it. There has been no notice in any of our committees of jurisdiction, the Committee on Energy and Commerce or the Committee on Ways and Means, that we will see this prescription drug bill.

So I am calling upon the Republican leadership, let us address this issue. Seniors are hurting. They cannot afford to pay for prescription drugs. A lot of them go without. Bring up the bill. Let us have the debate. Let us see whether or not the statements that my colleague from Florida made have any basis.

Everything that I have seen so far about the Republicans and what they are proposing is what I call a "privatization" of Medicare. They are saying that they want to bring up legislation that would take some money, almost like a voucher, and throw it to private insurance companies in the hope that they will provide drug-only policies to senior citizens who might be able to purchase such a policy and will get some help with it.

We know that privatization, trying to get insurance companies to offer these kinds of drug-only policies, does not work. The insurance executives, their trade group, have told Congress and the committees that they will not work; they do not want to sell that kind of insurance. It is unbelievable why they are just not willing to do what the Democrats have proposed and what most Americans want, which is to expand Medicare, a very good program that we have, yes, a government program, that provides for seniors' hospital care, that provides for seniors' doctors' bills, but does not provide for prescription drug, simply expand Medicare, very similar to what we do with part B, the coverage of doctor bills, and allow people to pay a very low premium per month. They get a good percentage of their prescription drug bills paid for, and it is a guarantee under Medicare, a very good existing program that works for senior citizens.

I do not know why the Republicans refuse to deal with this as an expansion of Medicare and instead talk about privatizing and giving some money to insurance companies in the hope that somehow seniors will be covered. That is not what the gentleman from Florida suggested, but that is what we are hearing from the Republican leadership.

The problem with Republicans proposal or what they are talking about is it does not address cost, does not address price. The problem right now, not just for seniors but for all Americans, is the cost of prescription drugs continues to escalate, double digit inflation for over the last 6 years. What we need to control in some way are these prices, and what the Democrats have said is let us have something like part B Medicare, like we have for our doctor bills where a person pays a very low premium per month, they have a very low deductible. I think it is a $100 deductible for the course of the year; 80 percent of the cost of their prescription drugs are covered by the Federal Government.

Most important, we put a cost mechanism in place that we say under the Democrats' proposal that the Secretary of Health and Human Services is mandated to negotiate and bring prices down because now he is going to represent 30 or 40 million seniors, and he will be able to negotiate better prices.

The Republicans do not talk about that. Not only does the Republican leadership want to privatize and just give money to insurance companies, but they do not suggest in any way that they are going to try to bring down the cost. Why in the world would private insurance companies just not try to pass on all the costs and all the money that the prescription drug companies make and simply pass it on to seniors? We have to have some pricing mechanism, and that is what we are demanding.

The Republicans need to bring up the bill. Bring up a bill that is comprehensive coverage under Medicare and that has some kind of pricing mechanism.

MAKING PERMANENT MARRIAGE TAX RELIEF

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks, I just want to kind of just make a comment. I find it is always interesting that my Democratic friends advocate permanent increases in spending and they are always first in line to advocate permanent increases in taxes, but they will fight tooth and nail any permanent tax cut. That is what I would like to talk about today, and that is, the fact that just a little over a year ago today President Bush signed into law a tax cut, a tax cut unfortunately because of congressional rules that had to be a temporary measure; but this was a tax cut which provided across-the-board tax relief for every American.

When President Bush became President, he inherited a weak economy; and he said if we could put a little bit of money back into the pocketbooks of working families, they will have some extra money to meet their needs back home; and, frankly, that money in the private sector will get our economy moving again, and of course, economists told us that since that bill was signed into law in June that by Labor Day of last year the economy was on the rebound. Unfortunately, the consequence of a terrorist attack just a new days later, as we know, shocked the confidence of consumers and investors; and of course, we are working to get our economy moving again.

As we work on getting our economy moving again, we also recognize that permanency in the Tax Code affects decision-making; and that is why last week we passed legislation to make permanent the elimination of the death tax, which will benefit family farmers and small businesses who are making long-term investment decisions knowing the tax consequences. That is good for the economy.

Today, I want to talk about legislation that we are going to be bringing before the House later this week, and this is legislation to make permanent the marriage tax relief that was in the Bush tax cut that we enacted 1 year ago.

Like many of my colleagues, I have come to the floor over the last several years asking a very fundamental question, that is, Is it right, is it fair that under our Tax Code married working couples paid higher taxes than two single people who chose to live together? Is it right, is it fair that 43 million married working couples paid on average about $1,700 more in higher taxes just because they are married? Is it right, is it fair that our Tax Code, prior to this past year, punished society's most basic institution with higher taxes?

I am proud to say that thanks to the leadership of House Republicans, under the leadership of Speaker HASTERT, we fought time and time again to eliminate the marriage tax penalty; and while we suffered vetoes under President Clinton, we are proud to say that under President Bush the marriage tax penalty was eliminated. We helped married couples in a number of ways, three ways as a matter of fact.

First, we doubled the standard deduction that is used by families who do not itemize their taxes. Almost 9 million married working couples do not itemize their taxes. So they use the standard deduction, and we doubled the standard deduction to be twice that for singles, eliminating their marriage penalty.

For those who itemize, such as those who give to their institution of faith, their church, their charity, synagogue or temple or mosque, we recognize that most married couples itemize their taxes if they own a home, for example, and we helped those by widening the 15 percent tax break so they could earn twice as much as a married couple as a single person and stay in the 15 percent tax bracket. We eliminate their marriage tax penalty.

Third, for low-income families who utilize and are helped by the earned income credit, we eliminate their marriage tax penalty as well. So we help low-income working middle-class married couples who have suffered the marriage tax penalty.

Let me give my colleagues an example of a married couple from Joliet, Illinois, in the district I represent in the south suburbs of Chicago. Jose and Magdalena Castillo, they are laborers. They have a combined income of $82,000. That is their combined income. Their children are Eduardo and Carolina. They are happy people. They work hard, great American citizens, enjoying life in the south suburbs of Chicago; but they suffered the marriage tax penalty because they chose to get married, and we believe the Tax Code should be marriage neutral.

Prior to the Bush tax cut being signed into law, Jose and Magdalena Castillo paid about $1,150 more in higher taxes just because they were married. If they chose to get divorced and live together, they would have saved $1,150 a year. Jose and Magdalena Castillo were helped by the Bush tax cut, which originated right here in the House of Representatives; and I am proud to say that that was signed into law last year, and for the next few years, the marriage tax penalty for the Castillo family will be eliminated.

If this Congress does nothing, it will be made permanent, and I believe we need to help married working couples; and this week, on Thursday, we are going to be voting to make permanent the marriage tax penalty relief in the Bush tax cut, and my hope is that we will have bipartisan support, that even our Democratic friends will join with us, in making marriage tax penalty relief permanent to help couples like Jose and Magdalena Castillo of Joliet, Illinois.

LIMITING GROWTH IN GOVERNMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, like many Americans, I learned last week of the President's intention to create for the first time since the 1970s a Cabinet-level Department of the executive branch; and like most Americans, I support the idea of a Department of Homeland Security, bringing together various and diverse elements of our investigative branches, of our counterterrorism branches and, more importantly, border security, to create a leaner, more efficient means of protecting our citizens than we have under current and, in many ways, antiquated structures in the executive branch.

While I support the reorganization of government, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak against big government and the growth in government, Mr. Speaker, that has been the natural antecedent to emergencies and crises throughout American history.

The Bible tells us that there is nothing new under the sun; what has been before will be again, in the book of "Ecclesiastes." And as I see these events unfold and I see our President beginning to call for the largest potential expansion in the executive branch in my lifetime, I cannot help but feel that what has been before is about to come again if we, who believe in limited government and personal responsibility, do not exercise the franchise of our vote and our conviction in this institution.

The idea that the unrestrained growth of government is a natural antecedent to emergencies was, to be perfectly honest, first posited in a book titled "Crisis and Leviathan," by a little-known professor named Robert Higgs, 1987, first published. Very simple thesis in this book. Professor Higgs argues that the growth of the Federal Government has been relatively constant through our national history except for spikes in the growth of government immediately following national crises and emergencies such as the Civil War, the Great Depression, World War II, the Kennedy assassination and social unrest of the 1960s and now potentially 9–11.

He offers what he calls the "crisis hypothesis" of the growth of Federal Government, and it is a powerful one; and he maintains that under certain conditions national emergencies call forth extensions of governmental control over or outright replacement of the market economy. In a time of economic crisis, "When critical extensions of government power are likely to occur there is little opportunity for meaningful vote on whether or not as a matter of principle the powers of the State should be extended."

Even Herbert Hoover, attempting to stem the enormous tide of the call of growth of government during the Great Depression, said, "Every collectivist revolution rides in on a Trojan horse of emergency. It was the tactic of Lenin, Hitler and Mussolini in the collectivist sweep over a dozen minor countries in Europe. It was the cry of men striving to get on horseback."

It has also been practiced many times throughout our history, not for a second to refer to President Truman and the likes of that litany; but it was not long after the Truman administration took office, the United States found itself in a fight with Korea and the government greatly expanded.

On December 16, 1950, as just one of many examples, Mr. Speaker, President Truman proclaimed a national emergency, calling in familiar words to this day, on all citizens to make a united effort for the security and well-being of our beloved country, to place its needs foremost in thought and action to our farmers, our workers in industry. So the President established the Office of Defense Mobilization, the Defense Protection Agency, and government grew in permanent ways.

Even in his book, in its closing chapters, Robert Higgs perhaps even wrote in 1987 about our own times saying that, "We know that other great crises will come in America, whether they will be occasioned by foreign wars, economic collapse or rampant terrorism. No one can predict with assurance that in one form or another great crises will surely come again as they have from time to time, and when they do, governments, almost certainly," Professor Higgs wrote, "will gain new powers over economic and social affairs, unless," he offers, and I argue, "the American people rediscover the worth of individual rights, limited government and a free society under the true rule of law."

□ 1300

Mr. Speaker, let us recognize the times that we are in. Let us recognize that the gale force wind of big government is upon us, and as we reorganize a Department of Homeland Security, let us not make it an excuse to simply organize big government in a permanent way.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2 p.m. today.

Accordingly (at 1 p.m.), the House stood in recess until 2 p.m.

□ 1400

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 2 p.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Lord God of Heaven and Earth, always attentive to our prayer and understanding of our human limitations, bless and guide the Members of the 107th Congress, that they may be Your agents of reconciliation in a world torn apart by war, cynicism and fear.

Enlighten them in mind and heart, that together they shine as a harbinger of hope, bringing creativity and new vision to the people.

Through their efforts to do what is right by living according to Your commands and following the dictates of conscience, rather than expediency, grant them keen insight into complicated issues. Bring about in them decisive wisdom that will not be frayed by tangential distractions or preconceived sound bites. For Your world, O Lord, is too vast, and Your people too precious to be compromised.

So we pray now and forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. LAMPSON) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. LAMPSON led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

EVENTS CONCERNING THE AFGHANISTAN LOYA JIRGA

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend Chairman Karzai, the interim administration, and the Afghan people for holding the Loya Jirga to select the new transitional government in Afghanistan.

Unfortunately, due to threats by certain Afghan factions and consequent actions by a small select group of U.N., U.S. and Northern Alliance officials, the Loya Jirga process has been marred. These officials forced the King to make a statement saying he would not run for any elected position in the government.

Sadly, preventing the people from choosing their own leader substantiates the concerns of the Afghan people that the U.S. and the international community have only their own interests at heart, not just that the Afghan people have peace, freedom, democracy, and fundamental human rights.

The Afghan people were looking forward to deciding their own future on their own. Yet before the Loya Jirga was even convened, they were denied the right to choose their own leader. Unfortunately, it appears that intimidation won again.

I am concerned that the Afghan people will not forget that the U.S., U.N., and Northern Alliance prevented the King, a highly respected leader, from holding a leadership position and helping bring peace, stability, and reconciliation to their nation.

Our State Department should have had more diplomacy.

LUDWIG KOONS KIDNAPPING

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I continue my story of Ludwig Koons, the young boy who is being held illegally by the Italian Government. Two weeks ago, the Minor's Tribunal in Rome denied the request of the prosecutor to remove Ludwig's mother, the kidnapper, parental authority. Not only is this outrageous, but the court made this decision without any psychological evaluation, testimony or other discovery whatsoever. The decision was made solely on the superficial interview of Ludwig before the judges, which lasted about 15 minutes.

This decision was made despite the finding that Ludwig was kept from having any contact with his father for over 6 months. Ludwig's mother, the woman who kidnapped him and is holding him against the will of United States courts, argued that Ludwig is afraid of his father, which is an absurd, preposterous allegation.

Jeff Koons's attorneys will be filing an appellate brief before the Rome Court of Appeals contesting this decision of the Minor's Tribunal as arbitrary and unfounded, which it absolutely is, and which this entire 8-year-long ordeal has been.

Mr. Speaker, please, I urge Members to join me. Help end this tragedy. We cannot stand idly by while American children are being kidnapped and held by foreign governments, even if they are our friends. Bring our children home.

COMMENDING THE GIRL SCOUTS ON THEIR 90TH ANNIVERSARY

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in recognition of the 90th anniversary of the Girl Scouts, an organization that has empowered girls to reach their full potential through partnerships with caring adults.

Since 1948, the Girl Scout Council of the Congaree Area of South Carolina has served girls from age 5 through 17 in Lancaster, Lexington, Sumter, Fairfield, Newberry, Richland, Saluda and Kershaw Counties, along with the city of Great Falls. With the dedicated leadership of President Ann Addy and Executive Director Pamela Hyland, the Congaree Area Council today boasts a membership of nearly 10,000. Nationally, the organization has grown to 3.6 million Girl Scouts, part of a worldwide family of 10 million in 140 countries.

The key to the success of the Girl Scouts is very simple: they have stressed the values that every person should strive to uphold. These values include integrity, respect, inclusiveness and responsibility to the community. Through the Scouts, girls learn that to realize true satisfaction in life a person must grow in mind, body and spirit.

IMPORTANCE OF MEN'S HEALTH WEEK

(Mr. DAVIS of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I attended an event in Chicago, Illinois, that the Near North Health Corporation used to kick off Men's Health Week; and it was a very interesting event, because there were a number of high-profile men who spoke of their illnesses. But they also spoke of the fact that for many years they never went to see a doctor. They had no idea that they may have been experiencing the difficulty.

So their message was a very simple one, that if you are a man, like all other people, you really need to see your doctor. You need to check on your health. You need to make sure you get rid of the macho image that nothing can happen to you.

So I would just extend their message to all men throughout America: check on your health. This is Men's Health Week. You start with yourself.

SUPPORTING CREATION OF HOMELAND SECURITY DEPARTMENT

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, "turf," as everyone knows, is sacred in Washington, D.C., and the favorite parlor game in Washington D.C. is turf war. Every Member of Congress, every committee and agency fights hard to maintain their turf; and I am concerned that turf battles may impede what is best for our Nation.

This morning, I testified in support of H.R. 4660, a bipartisan bill to create a Secretary of Homeland Security and a Director to the National Office of Combatting Terrorism.

This legislation includes three main points. First, it gives budget authority to those in charge of protecting our Nation's homeland. Second, it provides Congress the oversight we must have over this new office. Finally, this legislation will reorganize government to allow better information-sharing both vertically and horizontally. As we proceed, Congress must be mindful that the safety of the American people is more important than the power struggles of a few agencies or Congressmen.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join in this important effort, move beyond turf battles, and do what is right for the American people.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on postponed questions will be taken after debate has concluded on all motions to suspend the rules, but not before 6:30 p.m. today.

SENSE OF HOUSE ON IMPROVING MEN'S HEALTH

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 438) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that improving men's health through fitness and the reduction of obesity should be a priority.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 438

Whereas the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service has identified obesity as a major health problem;

Whereas 61 percent of adults in the United States are considered overweight or obese, as indicated by a body mass index (the most reliable measure) of 25 or greater;

Whereas 300,000 deaths each year in the United States are associated with being overweight or obese;

Whereas the economic cost of obesity in the United States was about $177 billion in 2000;

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous materials on House Resolution 438.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of House Resolution 438 to express the sense of Congress that improving men's health through fitness and reduction of obesity should be a priority. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY) is absolutely correct. Obesity is a major health problem for our society. We must help inform the American public about these risks so that they can take corrective actions to make changes in their food consumption and exercise behaviors.

Over 61 percent of U.S. adults are overweight, along with 13 percent of children. Approximately 300,000 American deaths a year are associated with obesity. What is frightening is that this trend is exponentially increasing. Since 1980, obesity among adults has doubled, and overweight children and adolescents have tripled. Americans need to know that being overweight places people at a higher risk for heart disease, cancer and stroke, all top killers in America, in addition to arthritis, breathing problems, and depression. New research has revealed that obesity can lead to Type 2 diabetes in children as well. There is hope, however, because obesity is preventable. Americans should not needlessly place themselves at risk.

Personal responsibility is key to ending this trend. Most Americans recognize that exercise and a healthy diet helps one stay fit and trim. Dieticians have made it perfectly clear: one truly can eat any food in moderation and remain perfectly healthy, but Americans are choosing not to eat foods in moderation and are all too often shortchanging vitamins and nutrients that are essential to fighting disease. Americans are also choosing not to exercise.

Americans have literally hundreds of options available to them to help lose weight and stay fit. We must help inform Americans about the risks that obesity imposes on their overall health and that fighting obesity will help save lives. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY) for raising the level of attention on this important issue. I encourage my colleagues to vote in favor of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague's resolution highlights a public health issue that undoubtedly deserves more attention. Obesity is linked to a host of acute and chronic conditions and costs our health care system as much as $100 billion every year. It is the second leading cause of unnecessary deaths in this country. Obesity can cause reproductive problems, pulmonary problems, osteoarthritis, liver disease, and can dramatically increase a person's risk for cancer and for diabetes. I do not doubt my colleague's sincere concern and desire to provoke a more serious Federal response to the obesity problem.

I look at H. Res. 438, at the title, Mr. Speaker, and it says "Expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that improving men's health through fitness and the reduction of obesity should be a priority." That is what we are voting on today. My question is, as it has been with each of the health care-oriented resolutions we have considered this year, how does all this rhetoric about wanting to address health care issues align with what we are actually doing to address health care issues?

Again, this resolution, Mr. Speaker, says "Expressing the sense of the House of Representatives in improving men's health through fitness and the reduction of obesity should be a priority." Of course it should be; but, again, it is one more resolution begging the question: What is this House of Representatives doing when it comes to prescription drugs, when it comes to dealing with disparities between rich and poor in the health care that is delivered, when it comes to deal with any of the health care problems that we face?

The President's budget cuts funding for chronic disease programs at CDC, yet we have this resolution on the House floor. It is the very program that pays attention to public health issues like obesity. The President ostensibly proposed cuts like this one to make room for the $665 billion price tag associated with making his tax cut permanent. Again, no money for an adequate prescription drug benefit; no real work on this issue, other than a resolution saying let us make it a priority.

Is this body going to restore the CDC funding so that we can really address the problems of obesity, or are we too wed to this tax cut that goes overwhelmingly to the richest people in our society? Are we going to target any funding to reducing the rates of obesity in this country? Where are the dollars going to come from, or are we just going to again pass a resolution that sounds real good that could help my friend from Pennsylvania in his fight for reelection because it looks good and we can send a news release out, but what does it really do, Mr. Speaker?

We have passed, largely along party lines, six pieces of legislation that dramatically reduce the Federal tax revenues available for existing public health initiatives, much less new ones like this. Six pieces of legislation, always overwhelmingly giving tax cuts to the richest people in this country. We have passed these six bills, yet we passed exactly one piece of legislation that would actually improve the public health, the bipartisan bioterrorism bill, approved last week to be signed by the President tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, we are draining trillions of dollars from the Federal coffers and, at the same time, pledging to do more to combat a host of public health problems, including obesity. Talk, Mr. Speaker, is cheap. If Congress could address public health problems just by talking about them, which seems to be what my Republican friends that run this Chamber seem to be all about, then there would be no public health problems. Each time we pass one of these resolutions, as meritorious as the subject matter may, in fact, be, we get away with talking about a significant issue rather than actually doing something about a significant issue. Somehow, this body feels justified in acknowledging that we need to do more, but never saying how we are going to do that, while draining the budget through tax cuts for the richest Americans after tax cut for the richest Americans.

I hope that every Member, Mr. Speaker, who votes for this resolution and pledges "to take proactive steps to intensify our efforts to combat this health problem" remembers that pledge and all of the other pledges when the next tax-cut-for-the-rich vote comes around.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY), a leader in, among other things, the battle for public health and public health awareness in this House.

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding the time. I would just observe to my colleagues that it is not at all clear to me that the majority party's respect for personal and economic freedom and the desire for families to keep more of what they earn is in any way the cause of the numerous health problems, including the one we are going to discuss today.

I am glad that we are bringing this resolution to the floor. The reason we are picking this week is because it is the week leading up to Father's Day that is National Men's Health Week. House Resolution 438 expresses the sense of the House that improving men's health through fitness and the reduction of obesity should be a priority for all of us, and I feel strongly about that.

I should observe that National Men's Health Week is currently celebrating its eighth year. I want to recognize one of the driving forces behind this recognition, and that is Rodale Publishing in Emmaus, Pennsylvania and, specifically, Men's Health Magazine, one of Rodale's flagship publications, has really driven this message and elevated the level of awareness of the problems that plague men, in particular health care problems.

Back in 1993, Men's Health Magazine asked its readers to support a nationwide initiative to identify and treat health issues of particular interest to men. This public awareness campaign was spearheaded by the National Men's Health Foundation with the help of Men's Health Magazine. As a result of their efforts, Congress passed a bill in 1994 naming the week prior to and including Father's Day as National Men's Health Week. They designated this week as an opportunity to encourage preventive health behavior, as well as early detection of diseases that disproportionately claim men as victims. It is one week out of the year to have a focused public service campaign to educate men and their families about the importance of positive health attitudes, preventive health practices, and treatments of health problems for men. It is important because, after all, men do lag behind women by 6 years in average life expectancy.

This message of wellness and disease prevention and individuals taking control of their own lives for the betterment of their lives is a big part of the tradition at Rodale Publishing. Rodale's magazines include Men's Health, Prevention, Runner's World, Bicycling, and a whole host of magazines geared towards helping people to improve really the quality of their lives, often by improving their fitness.

I also want to take a minute to recognize the tremendous work being done in this area by a friend of mine, Dave Zinczenko, the editor in chief of Men's Health Magazine. Dave is clearly dedicated, as well as his colleagues, to helping men find ways to live longer, healthier, better lives, and he has been a driving force behind this recognition of men's health needs.

So every year, Men's Health Magazine has now focused its coverage on this week to some topic, some topic specific to men's health. Last year was prostate cancer, the second leading cancer killer in men, and this year it is obesity which, according to the Surgeon General, will soon overtake smoking as America's number one leading health concern.

This year, the magazine's editors have launched the "Million Pound Challenge." It is a campaign to help the men of America drop the weight that quite literally threatens their lives. Media outlets from Good Morning America and the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette have done major coverage of this nationwide campaign to lose this excess weight, and the resolution we are debating today specifically underscores this effort.

I think it is worth distinguishing between two terms that are sometimes used interchangeably. Being overweight is different from suffering from obesity. It is really largely a matter of degree, but being overweight simply indicates that a person's weight exceeds the normal or the average weight for a given body height and frame size that may often lead to health problems, but not necessarily so. Obesity, on the other hand, is the condition in which an individual has an excessive amount of body fat. It has been demonstrated that the average individual in this country will gain approximately 1 pound of additional weight each year after the age of 25. Such a seemingly small gain results in 30 pounds of excess weight by the age of 55 years, and since bone and muscle mass sort of naturally decrease in a person at a rate of approximately 1½ pounds each year due to a reduction in physical activity, the fat is actually increasing at a rate of 1½ pounds each year. So that means somebody over a 30-year period when they reach middle age is often faced with 45 pounds of excess weight in the form of fat. This leads to obesity and can lead to serious health problems.

As I said, the Surgeon General has identified obesity as a major health problem already. Sixty-one percent of adults in the United States are now considered overweight or obese. As my colleague from New York pointed out, approximately 300,000 deaths each year occur prematurely in the United States and they are associated with the condition of being overweight or obese.

The economic cost of obesity in the United States is staggering. It is approximately $177 billion a year. Being overweight or obese puts people at a greater risk of a number of serious, life-threatening conditions, including heart disease, certain types of cancer, type 2 diabetes, stroke, arthritis, breathing problems and depression.

So how do people combat obesity? Well, people become overweight and obese for a variety of reasons: dietary, some socioeconomic, some genetic, but mostly it is lifestyle factors, and the long-term solution requires the recognition of the benefits of a well-balanced, a well-proportioned, moderate diet and a commitment to regular physical activity. Those are really the two things that are necessary.

In short, it is moderation and it is control of a lifestyle that is the key to fitness and can help dramatically increase the likelihood of longevity in one's life.

Unfortunately, too many adults do not even get the moderate amount of exercise that can make a huge difference. More than 60 percent of U.S. adults do not engage in the recommended amount of physical activity, which is only 30 minutes 3 to 4 times a week, but so many of us find it so hard to squeeze that in. Approximately 25 percent of all U.S. adults are not active at all.

We are here today to encourage everyone to improve their lifestyles through fitness and nutrition and seek out the experts and organizations that can provide the help if people need that. I want to commend those organizations that are already hard at work at addressing this problem of obesity.

Because of the true national scope of the problem, I urge my colleagues to pass this resolution. The resolution simply resolves that the United States House of Representatives recognizes that being overweight or obese is a major health concern in the United States. It commends and supports the work of all organizations that are taking steps to combat this health problem. It urges all governmental, State and private organizations to do everything in their power to promote healthier lifestyles, and it pledges to take proactive steps to intensify its efforts to combat this health problem.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER), who has been a leader in this and other issues like this.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy in allowing me to speak on this resolution.

I think it is important for us to spend a few minutes not just celebrating it in a verbal sense, but thinking about what Congress can do to step up to actually make it possible for citizens to lead more healthy lifestyles. We have already heard the statistics from my colleagues about obesity. We have heard about premature deaths. We have heard about problems that are related to that.

Well, I think it is pretty simple for us, because I was thinking about this as I rode my bicycle over to the Capitol to make this presentation. It is not rocket science to be able to deal with making these programs successful. We ought to, first of all, focus here in this Congress by leading by example. If we know that a third of adults, less than a third of adults engage in recommended amounts of physical activity, what is it that we can do here to make a difference?

Well, first and foremost, we can do something to make sure that our communities are welcoming for people to exercise. I look at what has happened in Atlanta. The gentleman talked about obesity. Atlanta has seen the highest rate of increase in obesity. The Centers for Disease Control in the last decade was looking at that. What is the problem in Atlanta? Well, as part of their rapid expansion, the most rapid expansion in the history of human settlement, they have sort of left out things that make it possible for people to be physically active, like sidewalks, safe places to bicycle. The air is not healthy in Atlanta, and so people are complaining even if they had an opportunity to have the facilities to exercise, it would not be healthy to do so.

The Surgeon General has recommended that communities create safe playgrounds, sidewalks, walking trails, particularly in urban areas; that employers should provide time for workers to get physical activity on the job; that schools provide physical education on a daily basis in every grade.

What has this Congress done to advance those objectives? I would suggest not very much.

These advances really pay for themselves. The incremental costs per person, if we are going to talk about obesity, are higher than smoking and twice the cost of alcoholism. Employers pay an average of $4,400 per year more for employee beneficiaries who have diabetes. The USDA has estimated that $71 billion could be saved if inactive Americans become active.

Well, I would suggest that part of what we are doing here in Congress ought to be looking at those facilities around the country. We are going to soon be re-enacting the Surface Transportation Act. The physical environment has a tremendous impact, as I mentioned relative to Atlanta. St.

Louis University has done a study of 17 new rural trails, and after the building of those trails, 60 percent of the trail users report they are more physically active than before the construction.

One of the things we do with the bicycle caucus as we are asking people to focus on it is to ask people to stop and reflect how many people in America right this minute are stuck in traffic on their way to ride a stationary bike in a health club. By providing the facilities that make it safe and convenient for people to get the over 150 million bicycles in this country out of the garages, out of the attics, out of the basements and put them on the street where people can use them, it is going to make a difference.

Think about in how many communities it is not safe for children to walk or bike to school. A generation ago, 90 percent of the children could get to school on their own safely. Today, that ratio has reversed, where only 10 percent of the children can do that; and it means there is a rush hour twice a day because people are trying to get the kids off-loaded at school, as well as having the attendant congestion air quality problems and lack of exercise.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we in Congress ought to take the lead, it is something each Member of Congress can do, by scheduling two or three meetings, of which we have a gazillion every week. And maybe if we have two or three of them that are involved with walking or running, a meeting on the move, we will be healthier; they will probably be shorter; our constituents will like it; we will have less caloric intake; and I would think it would be an opportunity for us to help shape ourselves up, our staff, and the people that we work with.

Make sure that the next authorization of the surface transportation act, and if Members will remember, we had ISTEA in 1991, we had TEA–21 in 1997, and the next one ought to be green tea, where we have an opportunity to be able to make our communities more livable with that investment.

Last but not least, I would suggest that in the time our Committee on Ways and Means is involved with all sorts of tax changes, maybe one tax change they could make would be to make sure that pedestrians and bicyclists have the same commuter tax benefit as people who drive or take transit, a very simple change of very low cost, but would send the right sort of signals for people to be physically fit in our country.

I would suggest that Congress should not just pass a resolution, but we ought to lead by example and do something about it to make sure that our communities are more livable and that our families are safe, healthy, and more economically secure.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON).

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intent of this sense of the House resolution on obesity and health. It is time to do more than pass this resolution, to do more than talk about this issue.

Until 2001, this Congress had never taken any substantial action to combat the most widespread health problem in the United States today: obesity and overweight. I worked with then chairman John Porter, now retired, chairman of the Committee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. He had an abiding interest in this issue.

Chairman Porter, before whom I testified on my own bill on this issue, put the first substantial funding to combat overweight and obesity, $125 million. It is pathetic that I am calling $125 million substantial funding. That is only when measured by what we had done before, a couple or $3 million every year.

But, Mr. Speaker, there was no money. After Chairman Porter put $125 million, there was no money in the President's budget last year. I came to the floor, worked with the Committee on Appropriations, and we got something above $68 million in. That is a little over half of what Chairman Porter left as his legacy: $125 million.

Now we are in 2003, Mr. Speaker. Once again, there is no money in the administration's budget for overweight and obesity, our most widespread health problem. We have to do it again, Mr. Speaker, unless we are going to be satisfied with this resolution. I do not think even those who offered it would be satisfied with this alone.

The $125 million is meant chiefly for combatting overweight and obesity among children. That is where the epidemic is the worst. Of course, that is where it is most preventable.

Chairman Porter agreed on the floor to incorporate sections of my own bill called LIFE, Lifetime Improvement in Health and Exercise. It had three sections, three rather commonsense sections:

First was training health professionals to recognize overweight before it becomes obesity. When people get to be obese, it is too late. It is very hard to come down, even from being overweight, much less obese. The health professions do not get in there early enough;

Secondly, strategies so people in their own workplaces and communities could begin on a mass schedule to incorporate exercise that people can do, that elderly people can do, that children can do, that harried middle-class working people can do;

Third, there is mass education. I am pleased to report, Mr. Speaker, that the first section of our bill is about to be under way this year. CDC, which was charged with this first $125 million, is about to launch a 15-city tour where it will roll out this new mass education, which means ads we will see on television trying to get children and their parents off of the fast food that is among what is making them obese.

Our response this year, remember, is zero funding. I implore everybody who votes for this resolution to help us get money in the appropriation bill to prevent at least a dozen diseases we could all name ourselves. This epidemic involves every race, every economic background, and every age group. It is amazing the young people, young people in their teens and early twenties, that are deeply involved in this overweight and obesity problem.

Computers and cable made us all couch potatoes. We have an obligation, we and only we can do it, to assume leadership of the American people and try to get rid of this terrible epidemic. Only Congress can send a wake-up call to the American people to get out and exercise and get off the fast food.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 438, a resolution in support of improving men's health through fitness and the reduction of obesity.

This resolution is timely as we focus on Men's Health Week. The question of obesity in our children and men is very concerning. Since 1980, the percentage of children who are overweight has doubled. This has led to serious health consequences: Type 2 diabetes, heart disease, hypertension, stroke, and in many instances, poor self-esteem among children.

The problem of obesity is magnified in African American and poor communities, where rates increased most in the last 10 years. It is estimated that the economic cost of obesity is more than $100 billion a year, or 8 percent of the health budget.

In a number of States, legislators have introduced bills to tax soft drinks and restrict advertising to certain hours of the day. These bills in effect limit personal freedom and responsibility. I believe that we must begin to seriously encourage people to exercise and pay attention to their diet. As a matter of fact, in some places, people are beginning to say that it is time that we learn to eat to live and not live to eat.

I want to commend the Grocery Manufacturers of America for their efforts to begin to deal with the issue of obesity in a serious way. There are initiatives under way by Kraft and other food companies to make healthier products readily available. Additionally, they are looking at partnering with community-based organizations, churches and others, to spread the message that fitness and nutrition are two components to a long life.

So again, I commend the gentleman for his resolution and look forward to working with him and others. I also want to be associated with the comments made by the gentleman from Ohio. I do indeed believe it is time that this House does serious work towards elimination of health disparities.

But I believe that we have to move in a real way towards the ultimate development of a national health plan, one that provides quality, comprehensive health care for every American, without regard to their ability to pay. It is then and only then do I believe that we will become the healthy Nation that we have the potential of being.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would close on our side with a couple of comments. I support the resolution offered by my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I would hope that this resolution and discussions like this on the floor, following up on the excellent comments of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), lead to an examination of practices of those in this society who, by their actions, really promote obesity; not so much the people that ultimately pay the price of worse health and earlier death, but the fast food chains whose marketing techniques of biggie-size this and biggie-size that encourage especially our young people to drink more high-caloried soda pop and eat more French fries and eat more, ingest more calories.

Look at even the growing obesity of children in places like China, which had no obesity problems until we began to export the fast food industry to countries like that. I would hope that we would examine the practices of those who promote obesity, such as the marketers and the advertisers, who spend billions of dollars to encourage, again, especially children in bad eating habits, to eat unhealthy food.

Imagine on television a marketer writing ads, a marketer who is maybe paid $500,000, using his or her skills to encourage a child to spend $3 at a fast food restaurant. That is not exactly an even match.

Look at even our schools, Mr. Speaker, where now schools in this country, because we underfund schools, they go to the private sector, they go to soft drink companies; and those soft drink companies will pay a fee to those schools so they can bring their pop machines into the cafeteria.

I think we have all been in schoolrooms where we have seen kids with a can of pop on their desk or walking down the hall with a soft drink. Some schools do not allow that, but too many do. When I was in school at Mansfield Senior High School, Mansfield, Ohio, 30 years ago, I remember the only vending machine in the cafeteria was an apple machine. Today we see soft drink machines in the cafeterias, in the halls, near the gyms. Because we underfund our public education, we have to give tax cuts in this institution to the richest people, so we underfund public education and then we force our schools to go out and make contracts with companies to bring pop machines in the schools, so leading those kids to more health problems in the future. That is really one of the reasons we have obesity in this country. It is all pretty tied together.

I hope this resolution in the future, and I plan to support the resolution of my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I hope it leads to an examination of the real issues surrounding this issue.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 438, expressing the sense of the Congress that improving men's health through fitness and the reduction of obesity should be a priority.

Physical fitness is key towards the prevention and reduction of obesity. As a nation we should encourage all men to continue to live an active life beyond their high school sports and other extra curricula activity years and well into their retirement years.

It's hard to believe that in the age of technological advances there are still very simple steps we can take to improve our health. Experts agree that moderate exercise; just 30 minutes a day, 3 times a week can have a significant impact on health. That's just an extra 15 minutes in the morning and evening. Exercise such as walking can reduce your risk of chronic, disabling and often fatal diseases like diabetes, cardiovascular disease, depression, stroke and cancer. It can reduce and even eliminate dependence on medications resulting in a significant amount of cash savings. Furthermore, exercise improves mental alertness and fosters healthy muscles, bones and joints.

The technology of the 21st century has spoiled us. The World Wide Web has put the world at our fingertips. With our busy schedules we have grown dependent on the Internet for shopping, paying bills and even purchasing groceries. With a push of a button food is delivered directly to our homes.

Obesity is one of the biggest public health challenges in our time. The high number of uninsured individuals, the outrageous prices of prescription drugs and the down turn of the economy have forced us to take initiative and control over our health. The estimated medical cost for physically inactive Americans is $77 billion. We must rely on cost-effective proven practices such as exercise that will contribute to the prevention and reduction of obesity.

That is why I support their resolution. Although technology has advanced by leaps and bounds our health has suffered by many of life's new conveniences. We are eating more, exercising less and becoming obese. H. Res. 438 does not expect our men to become tri-athletes rather it recognizes that physical activity is the key to reducing and preventing obesity.

I urge all of my colleagues to support H. Res. 438. I also encourage families, health professionals, businesses, community leaders, schools and universities to join in an effort to improve physical fitness through innovative approaches. Together we can join forces and conquer obesity and its cruel ramifications.

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 438, a sense of the House that improving men's health through fitness and reduction of obesity should be a priority. Obesity is a neglected public health problem in the United States. This disease affects approximately 51 million Americans and more than one quarter of all adults. The number of overweight and obese Americans has continued to increase since 1960. Unfortunately, this trend is not slowing down. Today, 61% of adult Americans (about 120 million) are categorized as being overweight or obese. While this resolution is focused solely on men's fitness and obesity issues, this epidemic transcends gender. While the prevalence of being overweight is higher for men (59.4%) than women (50.7%), the prevalence of obesity is higher for women (25.0%) than men (19.5%). Fitness and physical activity should be a priority for all Americans, regardless of gender.

Obesity is the second leading cause of unnecessary deaths. Each year, obesity causes at least 300,000 excess deaths in the U.S., and healthcare costs of American adults with obesity amount to approximately $100 billion. Obesity increases the risk of illness for about 30 serious medical conditions, including cancer, birth defects, cardiovascular disease, and stroke. Yet despite this correlation, obesity has not received the attention it deserves. Research is severely limited by a shortage of funds, and inadequate insurance coverage limits access to treatment.

Weight loss of about 10% of excess body weight is proven to benefit health by reducing many obesity related risk factors. Research has documented that physical activity is a key part of maintaining weight loss. Exercise can lower one's risk of heart disease and heart attack, high blood pressure, and high cholesterol. A decrease in the amount of daily activity related to work, transportation and personal chores is believed to contribute to the high percentage of overweight and obesity today. By adding moderate physical activity, progressing to 30 minutes or more on most or preferably all days of the week to one's daily routine, we can start to reverse the upward trend of obesity.

Mr. Speaker, we should applaud those who live a healthy lifestyle and encourage our public health system to recognize obesity and inactive lifestyles as a true health care epidemic. Finally, as of this past fiscal year, the IRS announced a new policy stating that "obesity is medically accepted to be a disease in its own right." For taxpayers, this means that treatment specifically for obesity can now be claimed as a medical deduction. I hope that this promotion of healthy lifestyles will continue as we try to curb this epidemic, and that a tax deduction for individuals who choose to stay healthy will be considered seriously by the IRS.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 438.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion are postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

HONORING THE LIFE AND ACHIEVEMENTS OF 19TH CENTURY ITALIAN-AMERICAN INVENTOR ANTONIO MEUCCI

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 269) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives to honor the life and achievements of 19th century Italian-American Inventor Antonio Meucci, and his work in the invention of the telephone.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 269

Whereas Antonio Meucci, the great Italian inventor, had a career that was both extraordinary and tragic;

Whereas, upon immigrating to New York, Meucci continued to work with ceaseless vigor on a project he had begun in Havana, Cuba, an invention he later called the "teletrofono", involving electronic communications;

Whereas Meucci set up a rudimentary communications link in his Staten Island home that connected the basement with the first floor, and later, when his wife began to suffer from crippling arthritis, he created a permanent link between his lab and his wife's second floor bedroom;

Whereas, having exhausted most of his life's savings in pursuing his work, Meucci was unable to commercialize his invention, though he demonstrated his invention in 1860 and had a description of it published in New York's Italian language newspaper;

Whereas Meucci never learned English well enough to navigate the complex American business community;

Whereas Meucci was unable to raise sufficient funds to pay his way through the patent application process, and thus had to settle for a caveat, a one year renewable notice of an impending patent, which was first filed on December 28, 1871;

Whereas Meucci later learned that the Western Union affiliate laboratory reportedly lost his working models, and Meucci, who at this point was living on public assistance, was unable to renew the caveat after 1874;

Whereas in March 1876, Alexander Graham Bell, who conducted experiments in the same laboratory where Meucci's materials had been stored, was granted a patent and was thereafter credited with inventing the telephone;

Whereas on January 13, 1887, the Government of the United States moved to annul the patent issued to Bell on the grounds of fraud and misrepresentation, a case that the Supreme Court found viable and remanded for trial;

Whereas Meucci died in October 1889, the Bell patent expired in January 1893, and the case was discontinued as moot without ever reaching the underlying issue of the true inventor of the telephone entitled to the patent; and

Whereas if Meucci had been able to pay the $10 fee to maintain the caveat after 1874, no patent could have been issued to Bell: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the life and achievements of Antonio Meucci should be recognized, and his work in the invention of the telephone should be acknowledged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 269.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the House consider House Resolution 269, important legislation introduced by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

This resolution expresses the sense of the House of Representatives in honoring the life and achievements of the 19th century Italian-American inventor, Antonio Meucci. We have all grown up believing that Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone. However, history must be rewritten if justice is to be done to recognize Meucci as the true inventor of the telephone.

☐ 1445

Bell was issued a patent for the telephone in 1887. However, 17 years earlier, in 1860, it was Meucci who successfully demonstrated his electronic communications link in his Staten Island, New York home, an invention he later called the teletrofono. Meucci was a poor man who never learned English and was unable to navigate the business world. He did not have the $10 needed to apply for a patent for his invention and was never able to get the financial backing needed to pursue a patent. Later, following a tragic accident in which Meucci was severely burned, the laboratory where he worked on his invention supposedly lost his working models needed to get a patent. Just a few years later, Bell who worked in the same laboratory, earned the patent for the telephone.

The story of Antonio Meucci is not well known. While he has not received credit for his invention in our history books, the House of Representatives will today honor the genius of the Italian American inventor Antonio Meucci.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all Members to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Antonio Meucci was born in Florence, Italy in 1808. He was fond of chemistry and at the age of 17 conceived an improved powerful propeller to be used in fireworks, so powerful that his little rockets lost control, caused damage to properties in the vicinity. This was the beginning of a life filled with experiments and discoveries.

Meucci spent the first 27 years of his life in Florence, Italy, 15 years in Havana, Cuba, and 39 years in Clifton, New York. While in Havana, Meucci discovered the latest discoveries in electricity, electrochemistry and electrotherapy in his laboratory which was next to his apartment. In 1865 Meucci wrote, "At Havana, by means of some little experiments, I came to discover that with an instrument placed at the ear and with the aid of electricity and a metallic wire, the exact word could be transmitted holding the conductor in the mouth . . . ". Meucci had discovered electrical speech transmission.

Meucci and his wife, Esther, moved to New York in 1850 where he established a very successful candle business. However, in 1854, his wife aggravated her rheumatoid arthritis to the point where she could seldom leave her bedroom in the third floor of the house.

Esther's illness stimulated the resuming of Meucci's speaking telegraph, as it allowed her to communicate with him and others from her bedroom. Meucci established a telephone link from Esther's room to the basement as well as to a larger laboratory in the yard. To call attention, a mechanical call bell was used, its wires running parallel to those of the telephone. Only one instrument was used at each end, that was alternately brought to the ear or mouth of the user. Meucci received little credit for the invention he later called the teletrofono.

This resolution recognizes his work, the importance of his efforts, and I am pleased to not only support it, but I also want to commend the gentleman for bringing it to the attention of all of the Members of this House and to the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA), the chief sponsor of this bill.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time. I thank Members on both sides, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), as well as the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL) for supporting this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, it is my strong belief that Italian Americans have contributed greatly to the United States and continue to contribute proudly as well. We know Columbus discovered America. Two Italians signed the Declaration of Independence. Enrico Fermi split the atom, and Captain Don Gentile, the fighting ace, was described by General Dwight Eisenhower as a "one-man force." He, like so many other Italian-Americans, did and were willing to give their life in defense of freedom and liberty and supporting these great United States.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to spend a few minutes today to honor an Italian American and former Staten Island resident who is often overlooked, as announced already, and his name was Antonio Meucci.

The 19th century was a time of great technological innovation, as its birth heralded the beginning of the Industrial Revolution. However, unlike the century just ended and the new one we are beginning to explore, the rough-and-tumble of our young Nation had yet to develop information exchange to the extent we enjoy today.

The Founding Fathers made America a guarantor of unprecedented and, to this day, unmatched liberty. This liberty included again an unprecedented appreciation for intellectual property rights. Today with our study of historical records and ability to examine many disparate sources of information, we now know it is likely the invention of what we know today as a telephone took place in the middle of the 19th century rather than its end, and its creator is believed to be Antonio Meucci. He worked for years to develop a new system of electronic communication. However, poor and sick, he was unable to keep the patents enforced and died before the courts could decide with finality whether he or Alexander Graham Bell was the true inventor of the telephone.

It is known that Meucci demonstrated his device in 1860, that a description appeared in New York's Italian language newspaper, and that Western Union received working models from Meucci but reportedly lost them.

It is also known that Meucci, due to his limited means, settled for a caveat, a one-year renewable notice of an impending patent, first filed in 1871, but which he was unable to pursue after 1874, while Alexander Graham Bell was not granted a patent until 1876.

Finally, it is known that the Supreme Court of the United States directed the case to proceed to trial but Meucci died a short time later, rendering the case moot.

So with these facts before the House today, I ask for the passage of this resolution to honor the life and achievements long overdue of Antonio Meucci, a great Italian American and a former great Staten Islander.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL), one who represents the feisty tradition of Italians and of Italian Americans, and a great spokesman not only for Italy and Italian Americans, but a great spokesman for all of America.

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, first I want to commend my good friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA). How refreshing it is to talk about an Italian American out of the Hollywood spotlight and an Italian American not recognized. If only we took the time in this society to deal with all ethnics, people of all racial persuasions in fairness, and that is what this resolution is all about: Fairness, honesty, breaking the stereotypes that many of us have learned; in fact, probably, taught without our even knowing.

We recognize today the life and achievements of Antonio Meucci. He was a pauper. He had nothing. He came here with nothing. He could not even put $10 up for a patent application. And yet his life is one of brilliance in science, particularly. He is only a footnote in our history books. We all know those great publishers that steer the education process of America. He earns, if he is lucky, a footnote. Indeed, many local libraries, if you search for his name in a card catalog, you may come up empty. Yet, substantial evidence exists that he indeed developed the first telephone. It is Alexander Graham Bell who is most commonly given credit. After all, it was he, and not Meucci, who was awarded one of the most valuable patents in American history. But the fact remains that Meucci's scientific discoveries concerning human voice transmission as well as his tangible teletrofono preceded those of Bell.

In fact, when you examine, Mr. Speaker, how this all happened in a place where Meucci heard an exclamation of a friend who was in another room over a piece of copper wire running between them, he realized immediately that he had something that was more important than any discovery he had ever made. But that realization also came with the understanding that to succeed as an inventor, he would need an environment that truly fostered his inquisitive mind and his vibrant spirit.

I believe that it is proper to honor the far-reaching contributions that Antonio Meucci made to our society, and I am not the only one. The Government of the United States and the Supreme Court agree with me. In this Supreme Court document, Mr. Speaker, it is very clear in the many pages laid out across the record that this is no ordinary young man in his struggle. In 1887 the Government moved to annul the patent issued to Bell on the grounds of misrepresentation, an indication that the Supreme Court found viable and remanded for retrial. This is only one of many published documents during the time, the late 1800s that outlined the case being made for Meucci, indeed, the case we are making today on both sides of the aisle. In 1860 a description of his first telephone model was published, as the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) pointed out, in an Italian language newspaper in New York City, 16 years before Bell's patent.

Indeed, Meucci's extraordinary career flourished upon immigrating to New York in 1850. His poor finances, his limited English, his grasp of the language was not very good. It plagued him throughout his life. Yet, he worked tirelessly to bring long distance communication to a practical stage.

When his wife fell paralyzed in 1855, Meucci set up a telephone system which joined several rooms of his house with his workshop in another building. This was the first such installation anywhere; anywhere. Unfortunately, Meucci was unable to raise those funds to pay his way through the arduous patent application process. Instead, he had to settle for a caveat, which is a one-year renewable notice of an impending patent. He first filed this on December 28, 1871. Three years later his finances were absolutely zero.

Living with the aid of public assistance and unable to get a 7–A loan, which today we have available through small business, Meucci was forced to allow the caveat to lapse at the end of that year. Two years after the expiration of his caveat, Alexander Graham Bell performed experiments in the same laboratory that Meucci worked, and he took out a patent for his own voice-transmitting device. The same laboratory.

It is possible that sometimes several inventors have the same idea at roughly the same time. In this case, what has mattered is not who had the idea for the telephone first, but who first turned the idea into a viable commercial enterprise. Let us not forget that if Antonio Meucci could have paid the $10 fee to maintain his caveat, the Bell patent could not have been granted. Ten dollars.

□ 1500

Let us not forget that the Supreme Court of the United States found that Meucci's case was viable and warranted a trial at a circuit court. It is unfortunate that Meucci died before his case could even be continued and before a resolution could be reached as to who truly invented the telephone; but most importantly, let us not forget that Antonio Meucci's great contributions to science have had a profound impact on our modern society.

Mr. Speaker, many people from many different nations have contributed to this greatest of all democracies. Antonio Meucci was one such person. He is a reflection of our brothers and sisters from all over the world who came to this country with nothing and worked hard to make this a better place for mankind. Some heralded, some not even a footnote in the library.

It is fitting that his efforts are recognized here today, and I thank the gentleman from New York for allowing me to work with him on this important resolution.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

We have no further requests for time, and I would just like to close by thanking both the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL) for this tremendous depiction of history that they have given us this afternoon, which reinforces my desire to be a strong supporter of this resolution; and it also reinforces how great and how much opportunity there is that exists in this country. Every time we pass one small measure, in this instance, it might have been a microbusiness loan that could have changed the history of our understanding of telecommunications.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to add and commend the two gentlemen, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) and especially the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL) for a very strong and passionate defense in support of the life of a great American and great inventor and merely add to the course, so to speak, that he was emblematic and remains so as a representative of all those who have come to this country to seek a better life and an opportunity and, in particular, to those Americans of Italian descent who have and will continue to make this the greatest country in the history of the world and in a small way and a long overdue way but in a small measure. I would ask my colleagues to support it.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the story of Antonio Meucci is a tragic one, and although he successfully demonstrated his electronic communication years before Alexander Graham Bell received a patent for the telephone, Meucci has been all but forgotten.

This resolution attempts to remedy this oversight and give credit to one of history's great inventors. Meucci should be remembered with other innovators, like Edison, the Wright Brothers, and Marconi, whose vision and tenacity changed our lives for the better.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this resolution.

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a great New Yorker and a great inventor, Antonio Meucci. As the first member of the House to join with our colleague from New York, Mr. Fossella, on this resolution, I am gratified that it is coming before us today.

House Resolution 269 honors the life and achievements of Antonio Meucci, who came to New York in 1850. Born in San Frediano, near Florence, Italy in April 1808, he was an inventor through and through. He constantly read scientific tracts and conducted experiment after experiment. He went to Havana in 1835 to work as a stage technician. It is there that he had the first inkling of his greatest invention.

Meucci developed a type of electro-shock treatment for the ill. While preparing to administer one of his treatments, Meucci heard his patient say something from the next room over the piece of copper wire running between them. This was the event that sparked his breakthrough.

Meucci spent the next ten years bringing the idea of voices being transmitted over wire to a practical stage. With this goal, he left Cuba for New York in 1850. There he found many other Italians who had left their native land, including the great revolutionary Garibaldi, who stayed in Meucci's Staten Island home.

During his time in New York he had success with his invention. After his wife became ill in 1855, he installed a kind of intercom system in his house, the first installed anywhere in the world. Five years later, he was arranging demonstrations to attract financial backing. Unfortunately, nothing came of this, and he spent a considerable time in poverty. His poverty forced him to sell rights to his inventions to others, and he never filed for a patent on a telephone. After an accident left the inventor hospitalized, his wife sold all of his inventions, including the telephone prototype, to help pay for his treatment. The "secondhand dealer" resold the items to an "unknown young man." To this day, we do not know the identity of this unknown young man.

Meucci tried to reconstruct his invention, but unable to raise the $250 needed for a patent, a considerable sum in 1871, he filed a "notice of intent" on December 28, 1871, which he renewed for two years, but not after. He tried to sell his "Talking Telegraph" to the newly established Western Union Telegraph Company, asking permission to demonstrate it over their wires. That test never got set up, and in 1876, Alexander Graham Bell filed a patent.

Meucci instructed his lawyer to protest to the U.S. Patent Office, but his lawyer failed to do so. A friend did contact the office, only to learn that all the documents filed by Meucci had been lost. Later investigation produced evidence of illegal relationships linking certain employees of the Patent Office and officials of Bell's company.

Antonio Meucci was a brilliant inventor but a poor businessman. Despite his lack of success in business, he most certainly invented the telephone. He is honored in my district with a road named for him in Copiague. I am proud that we, the entire House of Representatives, today will honor this man who has been overlooked by history for too long.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I add my voice to the praise and honor of Antonio Meucci who, through his work toward the invention of the telephone, has brought the world together as few others have. Through his ingenuity and perseverance, this Italian-American changed the way the world communicates, although as a newcomer to America, he was often thwarted by his own inability to communicate with those who could have, and should have given him the recognition he deserved.

Antonio Meucci came to America, pursuing his dream of introducing his "Talking Telegraph" to the world, and hoping to make a living doing so. Instead, he struggled against his own meager beginnings—not having the money or verbal skills he needed to protect his intellectual property. He also struggled against the incompetence and greed of others. Tragically, this extraordinary man's decade-long struggle for justice ended in poverty and frustration. I am pleased that we are finally helping him attain his rightful place in history.

I strongly support H.R. 269, honoring a man who embodies the travails of the American Immigrant experience—Antonio Meucci, the true inventor of the telephone.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 269.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMEMORATING AND ACKNOWLEDGING DEDICATION AND SACRIFICE MADE BY MEN AND WOMEN KILLED OR DISABLED WHILE SERVING AS PEACE OFFICERS

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 406) commemorating and acknowledging the dedication and sacrifice made by the men and women killed or disabled while serving as peace officers, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 406

Whereas the well-being of all people of the United States is preserved and enhanced as a direct result of the vigilance and dedication of law enforcement personnel;

Whereas more than 700,000 law enforcement personnel, at great risk to their personal safety, serve their fellow citizens as guardians of peace;

Whereas peace officers are on the front line in preserving the right of the children of the United States to receive an education in a crime-free environment, a right that is all too often threatened by the insidious fear caused by violence in schools;

Whereas 70 peace officers died at the World Trade Center in New York City on September 11, 2001, the most peace officers ever killed in a single incident in the history of the Nation;

Whereas more than 220 peace officers across the Nation were killed in the line of duty during 2001, which represents 57 percent more police fatalities than the previous year and makes 2001 the deadliest year for the law enforcement community since 1974;

Whereas every year, 1 out of every 9 peace officers is assaulted, 1 out of every 25 peace officers is injured, and 1 out of every 4,400 peace officers is killed in the line of duty;

Whereas section 136 of title 36, United States Code, requests that the President issue each year a proclamation designating May 15 as Peace Officers Memorial Day in honor of Federal, State, and local officers killed or disabled in the line of duty; and

Whereas on May 15, 2002, more than 15,000 peace officers are expected to gather in Washington, D.C. to join with the families of their recently fallen comrades to honor those comrades and all others who went before them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House—

(1) honors Federal, State, and local peace officers killed or disabled in the line of duty;

(2) supports the goals and ideals of Peace Officers Memorial Day; and

(3) calls upon the people of the United States to observe such a day with appropriate ceremonies and respect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 406.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the House consider House Resolution 406, important legislation introduced by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY). This resolution honors those peace officers who have been disabled or killed in the line of duty, and it supports the goals and ideal of Peace Officers Memorial Day.

Mr. Speaker, engraved on the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial in Washington, D.C., is a verse from Proverbs 28:1: "The wicked flee when no man pursueth; but the righteous are as bold as a lion." Today, over 740,000 sworn law enforcement personnel, which is the highest figure ever, live by that quotation from Proverbs. These 740,000 men and women serve their communities and Nation as guardians of peace, often at great risk to their personal safety.

The year 2001 was one of the deadliest years on record for law enforcement in the United States. The deaths occurred in a wide variety of circumstances, demonstrating that, no matter how routine an assignment might seem, a police officer's life may be at risk.

The National Law Enforcement Memorial tells the story of those slain in the line of duty.

The first fatality of 2001 occurred shortly after midnight on January 1 when Tennessee State Trooper John Mann was struck and killed while struggling with a carjacker along an interstate highway.

On September 11, 2001, more law enforcement officers were killed in a single incident than ever before in American history when 70 law enforcement officers died at the World Trade Center in New York City.

The last law enforcement fatality in 2001 occurred on December 29 in Horry County, South Carolina. Lieutenant Randy Gerald of the Horry County Sheriff's Office stopped on his way home from work to assist a woman who was being assaulted at a rest stop. As he pulled up, the assailant walked over to Lieutenant Gerald's vehicle and shot him three times.

Congress has recognized May 15 as the day on which all Americans should honor the dedicated men and women of law enforcement. On May 15, 2002, over 15,000 law enforcement officers gathered here in our Nation's capital to join with the families of their recently fallen comrades to honor them and all others who went before them.

We keep in our prayers those whose loved ones have fallen while serving as law enforcement officers. We keep in our prayers and thank those who work as law enforcement officers today.

The National Law Enforcement Memorial has an engraved quote by the Roman orator and great public official, Tacitus: "In valor . . . there is hope."

Mr. Speaker, those who work in law enforcement, and especially those who have sacrificed their lives, prove the truth of those words. We thank them for that.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all Members to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, the first recorded law enforcement fatality in the performance of duty occurred on May 17, 1792. The officer's name was Isaac Smith, a sheriff's deputy in New York City, who was shot to death while attempting to make an arrest. Since that time, more than 15,000 other officers have been killed in the line of duty; and today, roughly 740,000 officers continue to put their lives on the line for the safety, welfare, and protection of others.

May 15 is Peace Officers Memorial Day, and it is fitting that this resolution honoring the men and women of this country who were killed or disabled while serving as law enforcement officers be brought before this body.

September 11, 2001, provided a somber perspective of the importance of Peace Officers Memorial Day. In addition to the 70 law enforcement officers who died at the World Trade Center, another 158 officers died in the line of duty last year. Those 228 deaths represent the sixth deadliest year in law enforcement history in this country.

The first fatality of 2001 occurred shortly after midnight on January 1, when Tennessee State Trooper John Mann was struck and killed while struggling with a carjacker along an interstate highway.

The 228th law enforcement fatality occurred on December 29 when Lieutenant Randy Gerald, a South Carolina sheriff, stopped on his way home from work to assist a woman who was being assaulted at a rest stop. As he pulled up, the assailant walked over to Lieutenant Gerald and shot him three times.

These incidents, and countless others, bring to the forefront the sacrifice, acts of heroism and valor that police officers across the Nation perform every day. Their bravery and commitment to the job deserves to be remembered and revered, for it is obviously true that no greater gift can one give than to use his or her life for the safety and protection of others.

I would urge all Members to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY), and I would like to thank him for introducing this important piece of legislation.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. Jo Ann Davis) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Davis) for their support of this resolution. How could we not support this kind of a resolution? Where would our society be without those people who are willing to lay their lives on the line for us every day out there in the trenches of the front line?

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the peace officers from around the country, those who came to Washington last month to commemorate the deaths of over 230 peace officers last year and, particularly, to honor the memory of those 230 peace officers who gave their lives last year. Today, we pay tribute to the commitment, the sacrifice and public safety services peace officers have provided on a daily basis and continue to do so.

As we all know, September 11 stands out as one of the most tragic days in American history. That fateful Tuesday we lost 72 police officers, the largest single loss of law enforcement personnel in a single day in the history of our country.

While September 11 offered an extreme glimpse of law enforcement service and sacrifice, similar acts of heroism and valor are performed every day by police officers across our Nation; and the two speakers that preceded me illustrated some of those just in this 1 year, leading up to this day, less than a year, those who have died and lost their lives and given of themselves.

In addition to the 72 officers that died on September 11, another 158 officers died in the line of duty last year; and these 230 deaths represent the sixth deadliest year in law enforcement history, as has already been said.

Peace officers in every community have an admirable record of service and sacrifice; yet too many Americans lack a true understanding and appreciation of law enforcement's worth. That is why I worked 2 years ago to help establish the National Law Enforcement Museum in Washington, D.C.; and once construction is completed, the museum will highlight the proud history of the law enforcement profession and educate the people about the dangers and the importance of this job.

Unlike any other job, peace officers face unprecedented risks while bravely protecting our communities and our freedoms. I hope my colleagues will join with me today in paying tribute to our Nation's fallen officers and expressing our gratitude for the work that these men and women do day in and day out. While we are awake, while we are asleep, they are out there on the job.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he might consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. Filner).

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Davis) for yielding me the time.

I thank the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. Hefley) for introducing this very important resolution. I thank the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. Jo Ann Davis) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Davis) for their eloquent statements on behalf of law enforcement officers and how much they mean to our Nation.

I rise today, though, to point out an irony and hope to get support from my colleagues for law enforcement officers in our Federal agencies.

I hope that those who are on the floor today know that there are law enforcement officers throughout the Federal Government who protect us day and night. They may be in INS. They may be in U.S. Customs. They may be postal police. They may be police officers for the Veterans Administration. They work to protect our airports, the Library of Congress, the Supreme Court. They are members of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

These are law enforcement officers who do not have law enforcement status in terms of their pay and their retirement benefits. Mr. Speaker, these are people who are trained to carry a weapon. They wear bulletproof vests. They have a badge. They face the risk every day that police officers in our cities and States have to face.

I have watched mainly the inspectors at the U.S.-Mexico border in the district I represent in San Diego. I have watched members of the INS and U.S. Customs literally face death in confrontations with those who are trying to cross the border illegally or those who are trying to bring drugs and probably at some future point with terrorists; and yet I say again they are trained as law enforcement officers. They have the risk of law enforcement officers, but they do not have the status of law enforcement officers. That means that they do not get either the pay or the retirement benefits of those who are so classified.

Mr. Speaker, we talk today about honoring our law enforcement officers, and how their names are engraved at the National Law Enforcement Memorial several blocks away. It is ironic that some of these people that I refer to in the Department of Customs or INS, their names are engraved on the Law Enforcement Memorial, and they are recognized as law enforcement officers when they died, but we do not recognize them as such when they are living when we should pay recognition to them.

I hope those who are honoring our law enforcement officers today will look at H.R. 1841, the Law Enforcement Equity Act. It has over 180 sponsors, Democrat and Republican, from all across the country. I think it is time as we think today of our peace officers and law enforcement officers all over this Nation who have died in the line of duty, as we recall September 11 and the bravery of our peace officers there. I think it is time to say to our officers throughout the Federal Government, let us recognize them, too. Let us classify, and take the training that they have been given and the risks that they face, and give them the status that they deserve. I hope as we all vote for this resolution on the floor, we will think about H.R. 1841, the Law Enforcement Equity Act, and move forward in those situations also.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, over 14,500 Federal, State, and local law enforcement officers have been killed in the line of duty since 1900. It is appropriate that the House and the people of the United States recognize the men and women who work as law enforcement officers.

There are fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, friends and neighbors, and they deserve this recognition. I urge all Members to support this resolution, as amended.

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 406 offered by the gentleman of Colorado, Mr. Hefley.

Today, we honor some of our nation's most courageous citizens: local law enforcement officers. On September 11, 2001, many New York officers risked their lives to come to the rescue of those in crisis as the World Trade Towers came crashing down. And tragically, many of these courageous men and women perished.

In the nine months since September 11, the world watched the United States recover. The remains of the World Trade Center have been cleared away, but the memory of tremendous heroism remained in the trying days, weeks, and months that followed. Our nation will never forget the brave law enforcement officers who selflessly answered the call to duty on that dark September day.

Today, we honor law enforcement for their committed response to the September 11 terrorist attacks, but we also give tribute to our local officers for the important work and sacrifice they offer each and every day. In cities, towns and villages throughout our great nation, they protect Americans from violence and fight crime in our streets and schools. We depend on our community's law enforcement, not just times of great tragedy, but in our daily lives.

I urge my colleagues to support this important resolution and encourage all Americans to respect and honor the remarkable contributions of local law enforcement. They make our nation strong and proud.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, colleagues, and Representative Joel Hefley of Colorado for introducing House Resolution 406 to the floor.

It is important that Congress, as well as all Americans' realize how much dedication peace keeping officers have. In the great tragedy of September 11th, 70 peace keeping officers made the ultimate sacrifice in the line of duty. This does not stop there however, this year there was a 57 percent rise in police fatalities than the previous year. The risks which these officers take every day is considerably great. House Resolution 406 it will allow Congress to recognize all of the sacrifices which these people have made while serving as Peace Officers.

It is important to realize that these dedicated officers are here for us. The amount of negativity which has to be put up with on a day to day basis is above and beyond what any person should be expected to deal with. Every day that they leave for work their lives are in danger. If 1 out of every 4,400 peace officers is killed in the line of duty that is sadly a high rate. In 2001 there was a rise in deaths by over one and a half times that of the previous year. This makes 2001 the most fatal year for police fatalities since 1974. The last that their government could do, would be to recognize and acknowledge the sacrifice these people make.

House Resolution 406 does just that. This bill will honor all Federal, State, and local peace officers who have been killed or disabled in the line of duty. It will support all of the goals and ideals of Peace Officers Memorial Day. Finally it calls upon all Americans to observe such a day with appropriate ceremonies and respect.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 406 to commemorate and acknowledge the dedication and sacrifices made by the men and women killed or disabled while serving as Peace Officers.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, Americans have been called upon as a nation to show courage. The Peace Officers are protecting our daily freedoms. Law enforcement is the front line protector of freedom. In an unpredictable and constantly changing world, where communities and families expect safety and security, Peace Officers continually strive to be the best law enforcement officers recognized for their responsiveness and integrity. These Peace Officers put their lives on the line everyday for their communities with courage and honor.

Courage is the feeling of one's own power when summoned to duty. Courage comes not from facing the everyday but from standing fast against uncertainty. Courage is not inherited and not a matter of biological chance.

We may never understand the grief that the family suffers with the loss of a Peace Officer. However, those of us left behind recognize that these officers did not die in vain. We owe a debt to those who have given their lives, and the peace officers of this country want this memory to stay fresh in the minds of the citizens.

Therefore, I rise to lend my support and urge the establishment of a Peace Officers Memorial Day in honor of Federal, State, and local peace officers killed or disabled in the line of duty. They must never be forgotten, and we will remember their courage and duty.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Members of the entire House delegation from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania are cosponsors of this legislation.

Mr. .Speaker, Pennsylvania State Senator Herbert Arlene ably represented Philadelphia's Third Senatorial District in North Central Philadelphia for 14 years. Senator Arlene was Pennsylvania's first African American elected to the State Senate. Prior to his 1966 election to the Senate, he served in the State House of Representatives from 1958 to 1966. He was a businessman, philanthropist and community activist until his death in 1989 at age 72.

Many Philadelphians continue to revere Senator Arlene for his importance to Pennsylvania's history. They also recognize him for his emphasis on constituent services, and for his love of his city and his commonwealth. Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 3738.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3738, which names the U.S. Post Office located in Philadelphia after Herbert Arlene was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY) on February 13, 2002.

Herbert Arlene was Pennsylvania's first African American elected to the State Senate in that State. Senator Arlene also served in the State House of Representatives from 1958 to 1966 representing North Central Philadelphia. In addition to being a politician and elected official, he was an active businessman, a philanthropist, and a community activist until his death in 1989.

H.R. 3738 is a fitting tribute to the late Senator Herbert Arlene, and I would urge its swift passage and commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY) for its introduction. I urge all Members to vote in favor of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY).

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, we have heard the credentials of Herbert Arlene being the first African American State Senator in the State of Pennsylvania, a position that we were all proud that he held. On a personal note, I was elected chairman of the Democratic Party along with him, and he was elected as my Secretary. I served with him for 10 years, and he served with distinction in the city of Philadelphia in the Democratic Party.

Senator Arlene was a hands-on politician. He served the community in many ways, including as the leader of the 47th Ward in the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. Speaker, Herbert Arlene left behind a loving family, as well as a new generation of leaders in North Philadelphia. Many of my constituents continue to revere Senator Arlene for his importance to Pennsylvania's history. They also recognize him for his emphasis on constituent service, and his love of the city and the commonwealth. It is fitting that we designate the facility at 1299 North 7th Street in Philadelphia as the Herbert Arlene Post Office Building.

I thank the gentleman from Indiana (Chairman BURTON) and ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) of the Committee on Government Reform, and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) for all of their hard work on this bill. I urge Members to support this bill.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this measure, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REV. LEON SULLIVAN POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3739) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 6150 North Broad Street in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, as the "Rev. Leon Sullivan Post Office Building".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. DAVIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3739, introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY) designates a post office located in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania as the Reverend Leon Sullivan Post Office Building. Members of the entire House delegation from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania are cosponsors of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the Reverend Leon Sullivan devoted his life to helping others help themselves. Born and raised in Charleston, West Virginia, Leon Sullivan became pastor of Zion Baptist Church in urban Philadelphia in 1950, eventually increasing its membership from 600 to 6,000, making it one of the largest congregations in America.

In 1964, he founded Opportunities and Industrialization Centers, OICs, a self-help training program that has spread to 76 centers in the United States and 33 centers in 18 other countries, training more than 2 million people worldwide.

In 1971, Reverend Sullivan joined the GM board of directors, and became the first African American on the board of a major corporation. In 1977, Reverend Sullivan developed a code of conduct for companies operated in South Africa. The "Sullivan Principles" created a revolution in industrial race relations and were instrumental in dismantling apartheid. In 1999, the Global Sullivan Principles were issued at the United Nations. This expanded code calls for multinational companies to take an active role in the advancement of human rights and social justice.

Among his many other honors, in 1992 Sullivan was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest civilian award given in the United States. Reverend Leon Sullivan died on April 24, 2001, of leukemia at a Scottsdale, Arizona hospital. He was 78. I urge adoption of H.R. 3739.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3739, which designates a U.S. Post Office located in Philadelphia after Reverend Leon Sullivan was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY) on February 13, 2002.

The Reverend Leon Sullivan, a prominent social activist/reformer was the pastor of the Zion Baptist Church in Philadelphia for 38 years, overseeing congregational growth from 600 to 6,000. His commitment to social reform and justice extended into national and international areas. In 1964, he founded the Opportunities Industrialization Center in Philadelphia, which sponsored extensive training and retraining of welfare recipients. The program was expanded into other cities and countries.

I am pleased to say that I had the opportunity to actually work with the OIC that was founded in Chicago, and almost took a job working for them at one time. Perhaps if I had done that, I would not have ended up doing electorial politics.

Reverend Leon Sullivan was also the founder of the National Progress Association for Economic Development which supported minority businesses in economic development and training. He served on the boards of a number of major corporations and organizations, including General Motors, the Boy Scouts of America, and several large banks.

He is perhaps most remembered for the bold and innovative role he played in the global campaign to dismantle the system of apartheid in South Africa. In 1977, Reverend Leon Sullivan developed a code of conduct for companies operating in that country. The "Sullivan Principles," signed by more than 125 U.S. corporations, required racial equality and desegregation in the workplace, corporate involvement in the South African black community, and stated opposition to the apartheid system.

Reverend Leon Sullivan was the recipient of numerous awards and honors recognizing his ministry and commitment to social justice. He was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, and received the Dahlberg Peace Award from the American Baptist Convention.

Reverend Sullivan died on April 24, 2001 of leukemia. He was 78 years old. I commend my colleague for seeking to honor such an outstanding man of peace and vision, and urge swift consideration of this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I might add, I was in Nairobi, Kenya in 1975, and was pleased to see as I got off the plane and got downtown Nairobi, the first thing I saw was an OIC; and I said, I guess I am in the right place.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY).

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, today we honor the lion of Zion, Reverend Leon Sullivan, and it is fitting that we name the post office at 6150 North Broad Street in Philadelphia as the Rev. Leon Sullivan Post Office.

I have my speech here prepared, and I thank my two colleagues for their heartfelt words, but I would like to add a personal note.

☐ 1530

I knew the Reverend Leon Sullivan. I knew him well. He is revered in the city of Philadelphia as the Zion Church is on North Broad Street. His spirit lives on with that church. It is as vibrant as can be and is staying as vibrant as it can be with the 6,000 members that are there. I would like to say that a lot of good people are following in his footsteps. They are very, very large footsteps. I like to think that I got a little piece of that. I knew him personally. He was a dear friend. I had a good opportunity to see him not too long before his death. He will surely be missed.

I also again thank Chairman BURTON and Ranking Member WAXMAN of the Committee on Government Reform as well as Chairman WELDON and Ranking Member Davis and their staffs for all their hard work on this bill. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this important piece of legislation.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of naming a post office in Philadelphia after the Rev. Leon Sullivan.

Leon Sullivan was first of all, a man of God with deep spiritual beliefs as a Baptist minister. Rev. Sullivan made his mark in our country as a civil rights leader and founder of the Opportunities Industrialization Centers, which provides job training for in the U.S. and 18 other countries.

Rev. Sullivan made his mark on the international stage as a humanitarian in the struggle to free South Africa from the grip of the apartheid regime. As a member of the board of General Motors, in 1977, Rev. Sullivan developed the "Sullivan Principles" as a guide for companies operating in South Africa. They played a major role in convincing U.S. companies to divest in South Africa as long as the black majority was oppressed.

One of my greatest personal experiences was meeting with Rev. Sullivan and listening intently as he discussed with such passion and power, the need to help the African people move toward self-determination. I was proud to be of assistance to him.

Rev. Sullivan also wrote a book called the Global Sullivan Principles, which addressed the responsibility of multinational corporations to provide a livable pay for all workers. "Every business, large and small, can find a way to improve the standard of life for poor people who need help in America and in the world," he said.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this effort to name a post office on behalf of the Rev. Leon Sullivan, a man who saw the need for job training and set about developing job training centers around our country and around the world. What a high honor to recognize a man who saw the wrong of the South African apartheid regime and set about righting it.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3739.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM V. CIBOTTI POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3740) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 925 Dickinson Street in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, as the "William V. Cibotti Post Office Building," as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3740

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. WILLIAM A. CIBOTTI POST OFFICE BUILDING.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 925 Dickinson Street in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, shall be known and designated as the "William A. Cibotti Post Office Building".

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the William A. Cibotti Post Office Building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3740, introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY), designates a post office located in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania as the William V. Cibotti Post Office Building. Members of the entire House delegation from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania are cosponsors of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, William Cibotti was born in Philadelphia, the son of Italian immigrants. A leader in South Philadelphia's civic life for many years, Mr. Cibotti was chosen by his neighbors to serve as an elected magistrate from 1952 to 1966. In that year he was elected Philadelphia city councilman for the Second District, a position his daughter, Council President Anna Cibotti Verna, continues to hold.

Councilman Cibotti received a great many distinctions during his illustrious career, including being named Cavaliere of the Order of the Star of Italian Solidarity, an honor conferred by the government of the Italian Republic.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 3740, as amended.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) and the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) for the expeditious manner in which all of these bills have been brought to the floor. Their astuteness and willingness to cooperate have given us the opportunity to consider all three of these postal naming bills at one time, and I am sure that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY) is also appreciative of that.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3740, which names the U.S. post office located in Philadelphia after William Cibotti, was introduced on February 13, 2002, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY).

William A. Cibotti was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He graduated from South Philadelphia High School and the National Business College. Always very active in the political affairs of South Philadelphia, and the Democratic Party, he was elected city magistrate in 1952. He held that office until 1966 when he was elected city councilman in the Second District and was reelected in 1970.

A member of many civic, fraternal, charitable and social organizations, William Cibotti worked tirelessly on behalf of his constituents, community and his homeland of Italy. The Italian government awarded Councilman Cibotti the decoration of Cavaliere of the Order of the Star of Italian Solidarity. Councilman Cibotti passed away on January 17, 1975.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY) is to be commended for seeking to honor William Cibotti by designating a post office in his honor. I urge the swift consideration of H.R. 3740 with the necessary amendments.

Again, I want to thank the House leadership, both Republican and Democratic, for the expeditious manner in which these bills were processed so that they can be considered at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BRADY).

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I urge the passage of this bill which honors one of the legends of South Philadelphia, William A Cibotti. I am pleased that the post office at 925 Dickinson Street in Philadelphia, in South Philadelphia, will be known as the William A. Cibotti Post Office Building.

Mr. Cibotti was born in Philadelphia, the son of Italian immigrants. A leader in South Philadelphia's civic life for many years, Mr. Cibotti was chosen by his neighbors to serve as an elected magistrate from 1952 to 1966. In that year he was elected Philadelphia city councilman for the Second District in the city of Philadelphia, a position his daughter, Council President Anna Cibotti Verna, continues to hold.

Councilman Cibotti received a great many distinctions during his illustrious career, including the decoration of Cavaliere of the Order of the Star of Italian Solidarity, conferred by the government of the Italian Republic.

Philadelphia lost Councilman Cibotti in 1975, but his legacy lives on as a true servant of the people. As a testimony to that, his daughter, Anna Cibotti Verna, has continued his history of service as the Second District's councilperson and as our council president. I know that she is proud of her father and all he has accomplished. But I also know that he is even prouder of her as he looks down on all that she has achieved. Anna Verna is without question one of the finest, classiest people I know, in or out of government. Hopefully she will continue to serve for many years in that capacity.

I would like to thank Chairman BURTON and Ranking Member WAXMAN of the Committee on Government Reform as well as Chairman WELDON and Ranking Member DAVIS and their staffs for all their hard work on this bill. I again join my colleague in thanking the leadership in the Democratic and the Republican Party for bringing these bills to the floor for passage.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this measure, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3740, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 925 Dickinson Street in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, as the 'William A. Cibotti Post Office Building'.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

§544. Validity of transfer instruments

A deed, bill of sale, lease, or other instrument executed by or on behalf of an executive agency purporting to transfer title or other interest in surplus property under this chapter is conclusive evidence of compliance with the provisions of this chapter concerning title or other interest of a bona fide grantee or transferee for value and without notice of lack of compliance.

§545. Procedure for disposal

(a) PUBLIC ADVERTISING FOR BIDS.—

(1) REQUIREMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Administrator of General Services may make or authorize a disposal or a contract for disposal of surplus property only after public advertising for bids, under regulations the Administrator prescribes.

However, all bids may be rejected if it is in the public interest to do so.

(b) NEGOTIATED DISPOSAL.—Under regulations the Administrator prescribes, disposals and contracts for disposal may be negotiated without regard to subsection (a), but subject to obtaining competition that is feasible under the circumstances, if—

(1) necessary in the public interest—

(B) for a period not exceeding three months, with respect to a specifically described category of personal property as determined by the Administrator;

(2) the public health, safety, or national security will be promoted by a particular disposal of personal property;

(3) public exigency will not allow delay incident to advertising certain personal property;

(4) the nature and quantity of personal property involved are such that disposal under subsection (a) would impact an industry to an extent that would adversely affect the national economy, and the estimated fair market value of the property and other satisfactory terms of disposal can be obtained by negotiation;

(5) the estimated fair market value of the property involved does not exceed $15,000;

(6) after advertising under subsection (a), the bid prices for the property, or part of the property, are not reasonable or have not been independently arrived at in open competition;

(7) with respect to real property, the character or condition of the property or unusual circumstances make it impractical to advertise publicly for competitive bids and the fair market value of the property and other satisfactory terms of disposal can be obtained by negotiation;

(8) the disposal will be to a State, territory, or possession of the United States, or to a political subdivision of, or a tax-supported agency in, a State, territory, or possession, and the estimated fair market value of the property and other satisfactory terms of disposal are obtained by negotiation; or

(9) otherwise authorized by law.

(c) DISPOSAL THROUGH CONTRACT BROKERS.—Disposals and contracts for disposal of surplus real and related personal property through contract realty brokers employed by the Administrator shall be made in the manner followed in similar commercial transactions under regulations the Administrator prescribes. The regulations must require that brokers give wide public notice of the availability of the property for disposal.

(d) NEGOTIATED SALE AT FIXED PRICE.—

(1) AUTHORIZATION.—The Administrator may make a negotiated sale of personal property at a fixed price, either directly or through the use of a disposal contractor, without regard to subsection (a). However, the sale must be publicized to an extent consistent with the value and nature of the property involved and the price established must reflect the estimated fair market value of the property. Sales under this subsection are limited to categories of personal property for which the Administrator determines that disposal under this subsection best serves the interests of the Government.

(2) FIRST OFFER.—Under regulations and restrictions the Administrator prescribes, an opportunity to purchase property at a fixed price under this subsection may be offered first to an entity specified in subsection (b)(8) that has expressed an interest in the property.

(e) EXPLANATORY STATEMENTS FOR NEGOTIATED DISPOSALS.—

(1) REQUIREMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), an explanatory statement of the circumstances shall be prepared for each disposal by negotiation of—

(i) personal property that has an estimated fair market value in excess of $15,000;

(iii) real property disposed of by lease for a term of not more than 5 years, if the estimated fair annual rent is more than $100,000 for any year;

(iv) real property disposed of by lease for a term of more than 5 years, if the total estimated rent over the term of the lease is more than $100,000; or

(v) real property or real and related personal property disposed of by exchange, regardless of value, or any property for which any part of the consideration is real property.

(B) EXCEPTION.—An explanatory statement is not required for a disposal of personal property under subsection (d), or for a disposal of real or personal property authorized by any other law to be made without advertising.

(2) TRANSMITTAL TO CONGRESS.—The explanatory statement shall be transmitted to the appropriate committees of Congress in advance of the disposal, and a copy of the statement shall be preserved in the files of the executive agency making the disposal.

(3) LISTING IN REPORT.—A report of the Administrator under section 126 of this title must include a listing and description of any negotiated disposals of surplus property having an estimated fair market value of more than $15,000, in the case of real property, or $5,000, in the case of any other property, other than disposals for which an explanatory statement has been transmitted under this subsection.

(f) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAW.—Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5) does not apply to a disposal or contract for disposal made under this section.

§546. Contractor inventories

Subject to regulations of the Administrator of General Services, an executive agency may authorize a contractor or subcontractor with the agency to retain or dispose of contractor inventory.

§547. Agricultural commodities, foods, and cotton or woolen goods

(a) POLICIES.—The Administrator of General Services shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture to formulate policies for the disposal of surplus agricultural commodities, surplus foods processed from agricultural commodities, and surplus cotton or woolen goods. The policies shall be formulated to prevent surplus agricultural commodities, or surplus foods processed from agricultural commodities, from being dumped on the market in a disorderly manner and disrupting the market prices for agricultural commodities.

(b) TRANSFERS TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall transfer without charge to the Department of Agriculture any surplus agricultural commodities, foods, and cotton or woolen goods for disposal, when the Secretary determines that a transfer is necessary for the Secretary to carry out responsibilities for price support or stabilization.

(2) DEPOSIT OF RECEIPTS.—Receipts resulting from disposal by the Department under this subsection shall be deposited pursuant to any authority available to the Secretary. When applicable, however, net proceeds from the sale of surplus property transferred under this subsection shall be credited pursuant to section 572(a) of this title.

§548. Surplus vessels

The Maritime Administration shall dispose of surplus vessels of 1,500 gross tons or more which the Administration determines to be merchant vessels or capable of conversion to merchant use. The vessels shall be disposed of in accordance with the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1101 et seq.), and other laws authorizing the sale of such vessels.

The Administrator shall deposit amounts retained into the General Supply Fund established under section 321(a) of this title. From the amounts deposited, the Administrator may pay direct costs and reasonably related indirect costs incurred in conducting sales of personal property. At least once each year, amounts retained that are not needed to pay the direct and indirect costs shall be transferred from the General Supply Fund to the general fund or another appropriate account in the Treasury.

by the contract or subcontract, then the proceeds of the sale shall be credited in accordance with the contract or subcontract.

(d) ACCEPTANCE OF PROPERTY INSTEAD OF CASH.—An executive agency entitled to receive cash under a contract for the lease, sale, or other disposition of surplus property may accept property instead of cash if the President determines that the property is strategic or critical material. The property is valued at the prevailing market price when the cash payment becomes due.

(e) MANAGEMENT OF CREDIT, LEASES, AND PERMITS.—For a disposition of surplus property under this chapter, if credit has been extended, or if the disposition has been by lease or permit, the Administrator of General Services, in a manner and on terms the Administrator determines are in the best interest of the Federal Government—

(4) REPAIRS THAT ARE ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS.—The Administrator may repair, alter, or improve rented premises if the Administrator determines that doing so is advantageous to the Government in terms of economy, efficiency, or national security. The Administrator's determination must—

The Administrator shall establish a rental rate for leased space equivalent to the prevailing commercial rate for comparable space devoted to a similar purpose in the vicinity of the public building. The lease may be negotiated without competitive bids, but shall contain terms and conditions and be negotiated pursuant to procedures that the Administrator considers necessary to promote competition and to protect the public interest.

(2) OCCASIONAL USE OF SPACE FOR NON-COMMERCIAL PURPOSES.—The Administrator may make available, on occasion, or lease at a rate and on terms and conditions that the Administrator considers to be in the public interest, an auditorium, meeting room, courtyard, rooftop, or lobby of a public building to a person, firm, or organization engaged in cultural, educational, or recreational activity (as defined in section 3306(a) of this title) that will not disrupt the operation of the building.

(b) ORDER OF NEGOTIATION.—The agency head shall attempt to negotiate a contract, as provided in subsection (a), with the most highly qualified firm selected under section 1103 of this title. If the agency head is unable to negotiate a satisfactory contract with the firm, the agency head shall formally terminate negotiations and then undertake negotiations with the next most qualified of the selected firms, continuing the process until an agreement is reached. If the agency head is unable to negotiate a satisfactory contract with any of the selected firms, the agency head shall select additional firms in order of their competence and qualification and continue negotiations in accordance with this section until an agreement is reached.

(1) all land and other property which has been or may be assigned, set off, or conveyed to the Federal Government in payment of debts;

(2) all trusts created for the use of the Government in payment of debts due the Government; and

(3) the sale and disposal of land—

(A) assigned or set off to the Government in payment of debt; or

(B) vested in the Government by mortgage or other security for the payment of debts.

(b) NONAPPLICATION.—This section does not apply to—

(1) real estate which has been or shall be assigned, set off, or conveyed to the Government in payment of debts arising under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 1 et seq.); or

(2) trusts created for the use of the Government in payment of debts arising under the Code and due the Government.

§1302. Lease of buildings

Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, the leasing of buildings and property of the Federal Government shall be for a money consideration only. The lease may not include any provision for the alteration, repair, or improvement of the buildings or property as a part of the consideration for the rent to be paid for the use and occupation of the buildings or property. Money derived from the rent shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

§1303. Disposition of surplus real property

(a) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "federal agency" means an executive department, independent establishment, commission, board, bureau, division, or office in the executive branch, or other agency of the Federal Government, including wholly owned Government corporations.

(b) ASSIGNMENT OF SPACE OR LEASE OR SALE OF PROPERTY.—

(1) ACTIONS OF ADMINISTRATOR.—When the President, on the recommendation of the Administrator of General Services, or the federal agency having control of any real property the agency acquires that is located outside of the District of Columbia, other than military or naval reservations, declares the property to be surplus to the needs of the agency, the Administrator—

(A) may assign space in the property to any federal agency;

(B) pending a sale, may lease the property for not more than 5 years and on terms the Administrator considers to be in the public interest; or

(C) may sell the property at public sale to the highest responsible bidder on terms and after public advertisement that the Administrator considers to be in the public interest.

(2) REVIEW OF DECISION TO ASSIGN SPACE.—If the federal agency to which space is assigned does not desire to occupy the space, the decision of the Administrator under paragraph (1)(A) is subject to review by the President.

(3) NEGOTIATED SALE.—If no bids which are satisfactory as to price and responsibility of the bidder are received as a result of public advertisement, the Administrator may sell the property by negotiation, on terms as may be considered to be the best interest of the Government, but at a price not less than that bid by the highest responsible bidder.

(c) DEMOLITION.—The Administrator may demolish any building declared to be surplus to the needs of the Government under this section on deciding that demolition will be in the best interest of the Government. Before proceeding with the demolition, the Administrator shall inform the Secretary of the Interior in writing of the Administrator's intention to demolish the building, and shall not proceed with the demolition until receiving written notice from the Secretary that the building is not an historic building of national significance within the meaning of the Act of August 21, 1935 (16 U.S.C. 461 et seq.) (known as the Historic Sites, Buildings, and Antiquities Act). If the Secretary does not notify the Administrator of the Secretary's decision as to whether the building is an historic building of national significance within 90 days of the receipt of the notice of intention to demolish the building, the Administrator may proceed to demolish the building.

(d) REPAIRS AND ALTERATIONS TO ASSIGNED REAL PROPERTY.—When the Administrator, after investigation, decides that real property referred to in subsection (b) should be used for the accommodation of a federal agency, the Administrator may make any repairs or alterations that the Administrator considers necessary or advisable and may maintain and operate the property.

(e) PAYMENT BY FEDERAL AGENCIES.—

(1) ASSIGNED REAL PROPERTY.—To the extent that the appropriations of the General Services Administration not otherwise allocated are inadequate for repairs, alterations, maintenance, or operation, the Administrator may require each federal agency to which space has been assigned to pay promptly by check to the Administrator out of its appropriation for rent any part of the estimated or actual cost of the repairs, alterations, maintenance, and operation. Payment may be either in advance of, or on or during, occupancy of the space. The Administrator shall determine and equitably apportion the total amount to be paid among the agencies to whom space has been assigned.

(2) LEASED SPACES.—To the extent that the appropriations of the Administration not otherwise required are inadequate, the Administrator may require each federal agency to which leased space has been assigned to pay promptly by check to the Administrator out of its available appropriations any part of the estimated cost of rent, repairs, alterations, maintenance, operation, and moving. Payment may be either in advance or during occupancy of the space. When space in a building is occupied by two or more agencies, the Administrator shall determine and equitably apportion rental, operation, and other charges on the basis of the total amount of space leased.

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Necessary amounts may be appropriated to cover the costs incident to the sale or lease of real property, or authorized demolition of buildings on the property, declared to be surplus to the needs of any federal agency under this section, and the care, maintenance, and protection of the property, including pay of employees, travel of Government employees, brokers' fees not in excess of rates paid for similar services in the community where the property is situated, appraisals, photographs, surveys, evidence of title and perfecting of defective titles, advertising, and telephone and telegraph charges. However, the agency remains responsible for the proper care, maintenance, and protection of the property until the Administrator assumes custody or other disposition of the property is made.

(g) REGULATIONS.—The Administrator may prescribe regulations as necessary to carry out this section.

§1304. Transfer of federal property to States

(a) OBSOLETE BUILDINGS AND SITES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of General Services, in the Administrator's discretion, on terms the Administrator considers proper, and under regulations the Administrator may prescribe, may sell property described in paragraph (2) to a State or a political subdivision of a State for public use if the Administrator considers the sale to be in the best interest of the Federal Government.

(2) APPLICABLE PROPERTY.—The property referred to in paragraph (1) is any federal building, building site, or part of a building site under the Administrator's control that has been replaced by a new structure and that the Administrator determines is no longer needed by the Government.

(3) PRICE.—The purchase price for a sale under this section must be at least 50 percent of the value of the land as appraised by the Administrator.

(4) PROCEEDS OF SALE.—The proceeds of a sale under this section shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(5) PAYMENT TERMS.—The Administrator may enter into a long term contract for the payment of the purchase price in installments that the Administrator considers fair and reasonable. The Administrator may waive any requirement for interest charges on deferred payment.

(6) CONVEYANCE.—The Administrator may convey property sold under this section by the usual quitclaim deed.

(b) WIDENING OF PUBLIC ROADS.—

(1) DEFINITION.—In this subsection, the term "executive agency" means an executive department or independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government, including any wholly owned Government corporation.

(2) IN GENERAL.—When a State or a political subdivision of a State applies for a conveyance or transfer of real property of the Government in connection with an authorized widening of a public highway, street, or alley, the head of the executive agency that controls the affected real property may convey or transfer to the State or political subdivision, with or without consideration, an interest in the real property that the agency head determines is not adverse to the interests of the Government. A conveyance or transfer under this subsection is subject to terms and conditions the agency head considers necessary to protect the interests of the Government.

(3) LIMITATION ON TRANSFERS FOR HIGHWAY PURPOSES.—An interest in real property which can be transferred to a State or a political subdivision of a State for highway purposes under title 23 may not be conveyed or transferred under this subsection.

(4) LIMITATION ON ISSUANCE OF RIGHTS OF WAY.—Rights of way over, under, and through public lands and lands in the National Forest System may not be granted under this subsection.

§1305. Disposition of land acquired by devise

The General Services Administration may take custody, for disposal as excess property under this subtitle and title III of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 251 et seq.), of land acquired by the Federal Government by devise.

§1306. Disposition of abandoned or forfeited personal property

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section—

(1) AGENCY.—The term "agency" includes any executive department, independent establishment, board, commission, bureau, service, or division of the Federal Government, and any corporation in which the Government owns at least a majority of the stock.

(2) PROPERTY.—The term "property" means all personal property, including vessels, vehicles, and aircraft.

(b) VOLUNTARILY ABANDONED PROPERTY.—Property voluntarily abandoned to any agency in a way that vests title to the property in the Government may be retained by the agency and devoted to official use only. If the agency does not desire to retain the property, the head of the agency immediately shall notify the Administrator of General Services to that effect, and the Administrator, within a reasonable time, shall—

(1) order the agency to deliver the property to another agency that requests the property and that the Administrator believes should be given the property; or

(2) order disposal of the property as otherwise provided by law.

(c) FORFEITED PROPERTY.—

(1) AGENCY RETAINS PROPERTY.—An agency that seizes property that has been forfeited to the Government other than by court decree may retain the property and devote it only to official use instead of disposing of the property as otherwise provided by law if competent authority does not order the property returned to any claimant.

(2) AGENCY DOES NOT DESIRE TO RETAIN PROPERTY.—If the agency does not desire to retain the property, the head of the agency immediately shall notify the Administrator to that effect, and the property—

(A) if not ordered by competent authority to be returned to any claimant, or disposed of as otherwise provided by law, shall be delivered by the agency, on order of the Administrator given within a reasonable time, to another agency that requests the property and that the Administrator believes should be given the property; or

(B) on order of the Administrator given within a reasonable time, shall be disposed of as otherwise provided by law.

(d) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO COURT PROCEEDING FOR FORFEITURE.—

(1) NOTIFICATION OF ADMINISTRATOR.—If a proceeding has begun for the forfeiture of any property by court decree, the agency that seized the property immediately shall notify the Administrator and at the same time may file with the Administrator a request for the property for its official use.

(2) APPLICATION FOR COURT ORDER TO DELIVER PROPERTY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Before entry of a decree, the Administrator shall apply to the court to order delivery of the property in accordance with this paragraph.

(B) DELIVERY TO SEIZING AGENCY.—If the agency that seized the property files a request for the property under paragraph (1), the Administrator shall apply to the court to order delivery of the property to the agency that seized the property.

(C) DELIVERY TO OTHER REQUESTING AGENCY.—If the agency that seized the property does not file a request for the property under paragraph (1) but another agency requests the property, the Administrator shall apply to the court to order delivery of the property to the requesting agency if the Administrator believes that the requesting agency should be given the property.

(D) DELIVERY TO SEIZING AGENCY FOR TEMPORARY HOLDING.—If application to the court cannot be made under subparagraph (B) or (C) and the Administrator believes the property may later become necessary to any agency for official use, the Administrator shall apply to the court to order delivery of the property to the agency that seized the property, to be retained in its custody. Within a reasonable time, the Administrator shall order the agency to—

(i) deliver the property to another agency that requests the property and that the Administrator believes should be given the property; or

(ii) dispose of the property as otherwise provided by law.

(3) FORFEITURE DECREED.—If forfeiture is decreed and the property is not ordered by competent authority to be returned to any claimant, the court shall order delivery as provided in paragraph (2).

(4) WHEN NO APPLICATION MADE.—The court shall dispose of property for which no application is made in accordance with law.

(e) RETENTION OR DELIVERY OF PROPERTY DEEMED SALE.—Retention or delivery of forfeited or abandoned property under this section is deemed to be a sale of the property for the purpose of laws providing for informer's fees or remission or mitigation of a forfeiture. Property acquired under this section when no longer needed for official use shall be disposed of in the same manner as other surplus property.

(f) PAYMENT OF COSTS RELATED TO PROPERTY.—

(1) AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS.—The appropriation available to an agency for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of any property is available for—

(A) the payment of expenses of operation, maintenance, and repair of property of the same kind the agency receives under this section for official use;

(B) the payment of a lien recognized and allowed under law;

(C) the payment of amounts found to be due a person on the authorized remission or mitigation of a forfeiture; and

(D) reimbursement of other agencies as provided in paragraph (2).

(2) PAYMENT AND REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN COSTS.—The agency that receives property under this section shall pay the cost of hauling, transporting, towing, and storing the property. If the property is later delivered to another agency for official use under this section, the agency to which the property is delivered shall make reimbursement for all of those costs incurred prior to the date the property is delivered.

(g) REPORT.—With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Administrator may require an agency to make a report of all property abandoned to it or seized and the disposal of the property.

(h) ADMINISTRATIVE.—

(1) REGULATIONS.—With the approval of the Secretary, the Administrator may prescribe regulations necessary to carry out this section.

(2) OTHER LAWS NOT REPEALED.—This section does not repeal any other laws relating to the disposition of forfeited or abandoned property, except provisions of those laws directly in conflict with this section which were enacted prior to August 27, 1935.

(3) PROPERTY NOT SUBJECT TO ALLOCATION UNDER THIS SECTION.—The following classes of property are not subject to allocation under this section, but shall be disposed of in the manner otherwise provided by law:

(A) narcotic drugs, as defined in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.).

(B) firearms, as defined in section 5845 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 5845).

(C) other classes or kinds of property the disposal of which the Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary, may consider in the public interest, and may by regulation provide.

§ 1307. Disposition of securities

The President, or an officer, agent, or agency the President may designate, may dispose of any securities acquired on behalf of the Federal Government under the provisions of the Transportation Act of 1920 (ch. 91, 41 Stat. 456), including any securities acquired as an incident to a case under title 11, under a receivership or reorganization proceeding, by assignment, transfer, substitution, or issuance, or by acquisition of collateral given for the payment of obligations to the Government, or may make arrangements for the extension of the maturity of the securities, in the manner, in amounts, at prices, for cash, securities, or other property or any combination of cash, securities, or other property, and on terms and conditions the President or designee considers advisable and in the public interest.

§ 1308. Disposition of unfit horses and mules

Subject to applicable regulations under this subtitle and title III of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 251 et seq.), horses and mules belonging to the Federal Government that have become unfit for service may be destroyed or put out to pasture, either on pastures belonging to the Government or those belonging to financially sound and reputable humane organizations whose facilities permit them to care for the horses and mules during the remainder of their natural lives, at no cost to the Government.

§ 1309. Preservation, sale, or collection of wrecked, abandoned, or derelict property

The Administrator of General Services may make contracts and provisions for the preservation, sale, or collection of property, or the proceeds of property, which may have been wrecked, been abandoned, or become derelict, if the Administrator considers the contracts and provisions to be in the interest of the Federal Government and the property is within the jurisdiction of the United States and should come to the Government. A contract may provide compensation the Administrator considers just and reasonable to any person who gives information about the property or actually preserves, collects, surrenders, or pays over the property. Under each specific agreement for obtaining, preserving, collecting, or receiving property or making property available, the costs or claim chargeable to the Government may not exceed amounts realized and received by the Government.

§ 1310. Sale of war supplies, land, and buildings

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President, through the head of any executive department and on terms the head of the department considers expedient, may sell to a person, another department of the Federal Government, or the government of a foreign country engaged in war against a country with which the United States is at war—

(1) war supplies, material, and equipment;

(2) by-products of the war supplies, material, and equipment; and

(3) any building, plant, or factory, including the land on which the plant or factory may be situated, acquired since April 6, 1917, for the production of war supplies, materials, and equipment that, during the emergency existing on July 9, 1918, may have been purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the Government.

(b) LIMITATION ON SALE OF GUNS AND AMMUNITION.—Sales of guns and ammunition authorized under any law shall be limited to—

(1) other departments of the Government;

(2) governments of foreign countries engaged in war against a country with which the United States is at war; and

(3) members of the National Rifle Association and of other recognized associations organized in the United States for the encouragement of small-arms target practice.

§ 1311. Authority of President to obtain release

For the use or benefit of the Federal Government, the President may obtain from an individual or officer to whom land has been or will be conveyed a release of the individual's or officer's interest to the Government.

§ 1312. Release of real estate in certain cases

(a) IN GENERAL.—Real estate that has become the property of the Federal Government in payment of a debt which afterward is fully paid in money and received by the Government may be conveyed by the Administrator of General Services to the debtor from whom it was taken or to the heirs or devisees of the debtor or the person that they may appoint.

(b) NONAPPLICATION.—This section does not apply to real estate the Government acquires in payment of any debt arising under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 1 et seq.).

§ 1313. Releasing property from attachment

(a) STIPULATION OF DISCHARGE.—

(1) PERSON ASSERTING CLAIM ENTITLED TO BENEFITS.—In a judicial proceeding under the laws of a State, district, territory, or possession of the United States, when property owned or held by the Federal Government, or in which the Government has or claims an interest, is seized, arrested, attached, or held for the security or satisfaction of a claim made against the property, the Attorney General may direct the United States Attorney for the district in which the property is located to enter a stipulation that on discharge of the property from the seizure, arrest, attachment, or proceeding, the person asserting the claim against the property becomes entitled to all the benefits of this section.

(2) NONAPPLICATION.—This subsection does not—

(A) recognize or concede any right to enforce by seizure, arrest, attachment, or any judicial process a claim against property—

(i) of the Government; or

(ii) held, owned, or employed by the Government, or by a department of the Government, for a public use; or

(B) waive an objection to a proceeding brought to enforce the claim.

(b) PAYMENT.—After a discharge, a final judgment which affirms the claim for the security or satisfaction and the right of the person asserting the claim to enforce it against the property, notwithstanding the claims of the Government, is deemed to be a full and final determination of the rights of the person and entitles the person, as against the Government, to the rights the person would have had if possession of the property had not been changed. When the claim is for the payment of money found to be due, presentation of an authenticated copy of the record of the judgment and proceedings is sufficient evidence to the proper accounting officers for the allowance of the claim, which shall be allowed and paid out of amounts in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The amount allowed and paid shall not exceed the value of the interest of the Government in the property.

§ 1314. Easements

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section—

(1) EXECUTIVE AGENCY.—The term "executive agency" means an executive department or independent establishment in the executive branch of the Federal Government, including a wholly owned Government corporation.

(2) REAL PROPERTY OF THE GOVERNMENT.—The term "real property of the Government" excludes—

(A) public land (including minerals, vegetative, and other resources) in the United States, including—

(i) land reserved or dedicated for national forest purposes;

(ii) land the Secretary of the Interior administers or supervises in accordance with the Act of August 25, 1916 (16 U.S.C. 1, 2, 3, 4) (known as the National Park Service Organic Act);

(iii) Indian-owned trust and restricted land; and

(iv) land the Government acquires primarily for fish and wildlife conservation purposes and the Secretary administers;

(B) land withdrawn from the public domain primarily under the jurisdiction of the Secretary; and

(C) land acquired for national forest purposes.

(3) STATE.—The term "State" means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the territories and possessions of the United States.

(b) GRANT OF EASEMENT.—When a State, a political subdivision or agency of a State, or a person applies for the grant of an easement in, over, or on real property of the Government, the executive agency having control of the real property may grant to the applicant, on behalf of the Government, an easement that the head of the agency decides will not be adverse to the interests of the Government, subject to reservations, exceptions, limitations, benefits, burdens, terms, or conditions that the head of the agency considers necessary to protect the interests of the Government. The grant may be made without consideration, or with monetary or other consideration, including an interest in real property.

(c) RELINQUISHMENT OF LEGISLATIVE JURISDICTION.—In connection with the grant of an easement, the executive agency concerned may relinquish to the State in which the real property is located legislative jurisdiction that the executive agency considers necessary or desirable. Relinquishment of legislative jurisdiction may be accomplished by filing with the chief executive officer of the State a notice of relinquishment to take effect upon acceptance or by proceeding in the manner that the laws applicable to the State may provide.

(d) TERMINATION OF EASEMENT.—

(1) WHEN TERMINATION OCCURS.—The instrument granting the easement may provide for termination of any part of the easement if there has been—

(A) a failure to comply with a term or condition of the grant;

(B) a nonuse of the easement for a consecutive 2-year period for the purpose for which granted; or

(C) an abandonment of the easement.

(2) NOTICE REQUIRED.—If a termination provision is included, it shall require that written notice of the termination be given to the grantee, or its successors or assigns.

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The termination is effective as of the date of the notice.

(e) ADDITIONAL EASEMENT AUTHORITY.—The authority conferred by this section is in addition to, and shall not affect or be subject to, any other law under which an executive agency may grant easements.

(f) LIMITATION ON ISSUANCE OF RIGHTS OF WAY.—Rights of way over, under, and through public lands and lands in the National Forest System may not be granted under this section.

§1315. Special police

(a) APPOINTMENT.—The Administrator of General Services, or an official of the General Services Administration authorized by the Administrator, may appoint uniformed guards of the Administration as special police without additional compensation for duty in connection with the policing of all buildings and areas owned or occupied by the Federal Government and under the charge and control of the Administrator.

(b) POWERS.—Special police appointed under this section have the same powers as sheriffs and constables on property referred to in subsection (a) to enforce laws enacted for the protection of individuals and property, prevent breaches of the peace, suppress affrays or unlawful assemblies, and enforce regulations prescribed by the Administrator or an official of the Administration authorized by the Administrator for property under their jurisdiction. However, the jurisdiction and policing powers of special police do not extend to the service of civil process.

(c) DETAIL.—On the application of the head of a department or agency of the Government having property of the Government under its administration and control, the Administrator or an official of the Administration authorized by the Administrator may detail special police for the protection of the property and, if the Administrator considers it desirable, may extend to the property the applicability of regulations and enforce them as provided in this section.

(d) USE OF OTHER LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES.—When it is considered economical and in the public interest, the Administrator or an official of the Administration authorized by the Administrator may utilize the facilities and services of existing federal law enforcement agencies, and, with the consent of a state or local agency, the facilities and services of state or local law enforcement agencies.

(e) NONUNIFORMED SPECIAL POLICE.—The Administrator, or an official of the Administration authorized by the Administrator, may empower officials or employees of the Administration authorized to perform investigative functions to act as nonuniformed special police to protect property under the charge and control of the Administration and to carry firearms, whether on federal property or in travel status. When on real property under the charge and control of the Administration, officials or employees empowered to act as nonuniformed special police have the power to enforce federal laws for the protection of individuals and property and to enforce regulations for that purpose that the Administrator or an official of the Administration authorized by the Administrator prescribes and publishes. The special police may make arrests without warrant for any offense committed on the property if the police have reasonable grounds to believe the offense constitutes a felony under the laws of the United States and that the individual to be arrested is guilty of that offense.

(f) ADMINISTRATIVE.—The Administrator or an official of the Administration authorized by the Administrator may prescribe regulations necessary for the government of the property under their charge and control, and may annex to the regulations reasonable penalties, within the limits prescribed in subsection (g), that will ensure their enforcement. The regulations shall be posted and kept posted in a conspicuous place on the property.

(g) PENALTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a person violating a regulation prescribed under subsection (f) shall be fined under title 18, imprisoned for not more than 30 days, or both.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR MILITARY TRAFFIC REGULATION.—

(A) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term "military traffic regulation" means a regulation for the control of vehicular or pedestrian traffic on military installations that the Secretary of Defense prescribes under subsection (f).

(B) IN GENERAL.—A person violating a military traffic regulation shall be fined an amount not exceeding the amount of the maximum fine for a similar offense under the criminal or civil law of the State, district, territory, or possession of the United States where the military installation in which the violation occurred is located, imprisoned for not more than 30 days, or both.

SUBCHAPTER II—ACQUIRING LAND

§3111. Approval of sufficiency of title prior to acquisition

(a) Approval of Attorney General Required.—Public money may not be expended to purchase land or any interest in land unless the Attorney General gives prior written approval of the sufficiency of the title to the land for the purpose for which the Federal Government is acquiring the property.

(b) Delegation.—

(1) In general.—The Attorney General may delegate the responsibility under this section to other departments and agencies of the Government, subject to general supervision by the Attorney General and in accordance with regulations the Attorney General prescribes.

(2) Request for opinion of Attorney General.—A department or agency of the Government that has been delegated the responsibility to approve land titles under this section may request the Attorney General to render an opinion as to the validity of the title to any real property or interest in the property, or may request the advice or assistance of the Attorney General in connection with determinations as to the sufficiency of titles.

(c) Payment of Expenses for Procuring Certificates of Title.—Except where otherwise authorized by law or provided by contract, the expenses of procuring certificates of titles or other evidences of title as the Attorney General may require may be paid out of the appropriations for the acquisition of land or out of the appropriations made for the contingencies of the acquiring department or agency of the Government.

(d) Nonapplication.—This section does not affect any provision of law in effect on September 1, 1970, that is applicable to the acquisition of land or interests in land by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

§3112. Federal jurisdiction

(b) Acquisition and Acceptance of Jurisdiction.—When the head of a department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government, or other authorized officer of the department, agency, or independent establishment, considers it desirable, that individual may accept or secure, from the State in which land or an interest in land that is under the immediate jurisdiction, custody, or control of the individual is situated, consent to, or cession of, any jurisdiction over the land or interest not previously obtained. The individual shall indicate acceptance of jurisdiction on behalf of the Government by filing a notice of acceptance with the Governor of the State or in another manner prescribed by the laws of the State where the land is situated.

(c) Presumption.—It is conclusively presumed that jurisdiction has not been accepted until the Government accepts jurisdiction over land as provided in this section.
